Foreign Affairs Minister on Iraq crisis:

By YASSER M. AL-MAYASI YEMEN TIMES STAFF

While Yemen joined protests this week against a possible U.S.-led strike on Iraq, The Yemen Times interviewed Foreign Affairs Minister Dr. Abubakr Al-Qirbi to ask him what such a strike might mean for the region. Following is his response, along with other questions and responses to Yemen's relationship with the U.S., it's fight on terrorism, and a range of other issues dealing with Yemen foreign affairs.

Q: How do you see the near future, especially the threat of attack on Iraq?

A: What does not kill you only makes you stronger. We are wishing that we come out of these difficult times a better nation and a part of a better world as a whole.

The fact is that there are forces in

Investigation continues

Prominent sheikh's son-in-law arrested over Omar assassination authorities Wednesday the son-in-law of Sheikh Abdulamajeed al-Zindani in connection with the assassination of the YSP

Reliable sources said that Abdulsalam Al-Hariri, married to one of the Zindani's daughters was arrested by intelligence after being interrogated by the prosecution.

The prosecution summoned al-Kamil to be questioned in connection with the assassination of Jralallah Omar, YSP's Assistant Secretary General after his name was mentioned while interrogating the assassin, Ali Jarallah.

He was taken by the intelligence after the prosecution interrogated

Al-Kamil studied in Saudi Arabia during the 1980s and he was married to al-Zandani's daughter during the early 1990s.

The authorities have already arrested a number of people on charges of having links with the killers of Omar and the US aid workers in Jibla.

YSP sources also said that the casefile of their leader's assassination has been returned to the intelligence for further investigation.

pects are being now interrogated again by the intelligence.

The case was already given to the prosecution for completing investigation and then trial, but the YSP refused that and demanded a more thorough investigation that can disclose the compliance of the killer.

The prosecution has accepted socialist lawyers' probe into the investigation reports and were even given copies of them.

Yet, the YSP said that these reports are not complete and more are desired. It said these reports need time

BEEP endorse the 2003 work plan

Is education on the right path?

ANA'A_ As a contribution by the basic Education Expansion Project (BEEP) to put Yemen on the track to achieve education for all, the steering committee of BEEP recently endorsed the 2003 work plan which aims to increase enrollment of rural children especially girls, in basic education by building 317 new schools and renovating 244 school buildings in four governorates: Sana'a, Amran, Almahweet,

The work plan also aims to improve quality through service teacher training and continuing school supervision, where 20,000 teachers will be trained and 12,000 supervision visits to schools will be conducted.

Building capacities are also one of the main objectives of BEEP; the work plan support the establishment of community participation unit at the Ministry of Education as well as activities such as awareness campaigns and communities mobilization and training; conducting routine school survey, training MOE staff on planning and projects management and establishing management information system.

It is to point out that BEEP has been launched in 2001 where a pilot project was implemented in four districts of Sana'a governorate, included building of 55 schools along with quality improvement and building capacities programs. In addition to 2002 program which included 260 schools that are now under construction and a very comprehensive software program.

Foundation strives to protect cultural heritage

BY MOHAMMED AL-MASANI YEMEN TIMES STAFF

he Foundation for the Protection of Antiquities and Cultural Heritage, a non-governmental group, was established recently by a group of prominent businessmen who are interested in reviving the Yemeni folklore.

The foundation aims at raising cultural awareness about the great heritage other local and international related organizations and institutions.

The foundation has published a brochure sponsored by the British Council called "Yemen in the Land of the Queen of Sheba," about the Yemeni Civilization exhibition held in a British museum in London recently.

The foundation organized and prepared the visits of high-ranking cultural Yemeni delegation to the Netherlands, Germany and the United Sates, to empower decision-makers in the Yemeni heritage institutions to get acquainted with museums and exchange experiences in the European countries.

From Dec. 22 to 28 the delegation held a special exhibition for Yemeni manuscripts relating to writing and art that coincided with 19th Book Fair in Sana'a. That exhibition is considered unique, and organized along with Culture Ministry.

The foundation has published special Arabic-English catalogues.

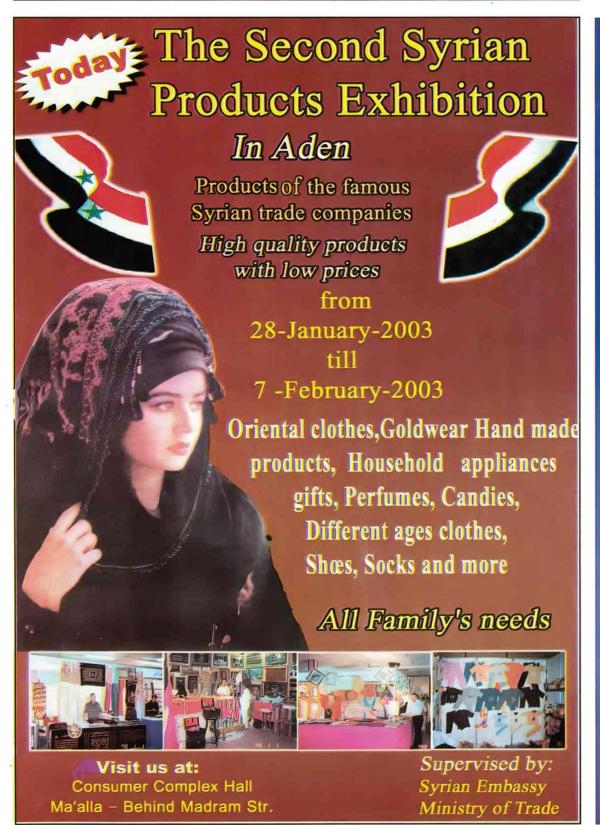

And future projects for the foundation include renewing the Al-Qahara and Kalan castles-fort.

The most important thing that foundation has brought attention to is the archeological importance and unique architecture style as well as the tourist locations have, in addition to the historical roles that forts and castle had been received.

World Bank credit

FOR THE YEMEN TIMES

he World Bank has approved a $23 million credit to boost investment climate, growth and new jobs in Yemen's port cities of Aden, Hodeidah and Mukalla.

The loan is the first in a threephase initiative to develop Yemen's coastal cities over twelve years at a cost of $96 million

The first phase of the Port Cities Development Program will center on Aden, Yemen's commercial hub, whose strategic location at the tip of the Arabian peninsula once made it the second busiest port in the world.

The program will begin with small-scale infrastructure investments, such as improving facilities at a local fish market and road works at an industrial estate, to fuel small business growth and build linkages to Aden's transport facilities. Training and investment planning will begin in parallel in both Hodeidah and Mukalla.

To attract private investors, the first phase will also focus on enhancing the ability of Aden's local government to deliver efficient services to the private sector through administrative modernization, automation of business transactions and information and communications technology.

Another component of the program will support an economic development strategy for Yemen's three largest port cities that would capitalize on their comparative advantages such as transshipment and vessel servicing in Aden, agro-industries in Hodeidah and fisheries in Mukalla.

Larger scale strategic investments will be planned for subsequent phases of the program in all three port

With a gross national product per capita of US $460, Yemen's 18.5 million people remain among the poorest in the world. About 42 percent of households live below the poverty line, and approximately 25 percent are unemployed or underemployed. One of the challenges facing Yemen is to reduce its dependence on rapidly depleting oil reserves and turn to promising non-oil sectors and attract private investment.

"At these difficult moments for the country, this program serves to remind everyone of the tremendous potential of Yemen. It is a reminder of Yemen's rich trading culture, its fantastic location advantage, and its ability to plan long term for its future development," said Omar Razzaz, World Bank Country Manager who is leading the project.

The port Cities Development Program responds to the government of Yemen's need to develop an investor-friendly environment and turn its port cities into regional engines for growth by drawing upon its historical affinity to international

The program falls in line with the World Bank's Country Assistance Strategy for Yemen which includes generating jobs by creating an attractive investment climate and promoting good governance for improved service delivery to the public and business community.

Barat and its people need more support

A notorious place

BY ABDUH M. ASSABRI YEMEN TIMES STAFF AL-JAWF, BARAT abdo@yementimes.com

he district of Barat is among Yemen's intriguing places. The district branches off into the three districts of Barat Almarashi, Barat al-Enan, which is thickly populated, and Barat Rajouza. It is about, 160 km north of Sana'a and administratively it now belongs to al- Jawf governorate.

I recently went on a one-day mission to Barat to learn more about its people, climate, geographical division and tribal conventions. Here's what I

It was nine o'clock in the morning when the car took us to Sana'a-Sada'a highway. It was quite an interesting to experience travel with people from

At first I had mixed feelings about traveling to such a hot-spot. I was accompanied by two restless nomads from al- Jawf, and some others from Barat in a Saloon car

The two nomads were old enough. They weren't enthusiastic about their short tour to Sana'a. Perhaps they spent years wallowing in despair because of their telltale signs of being fed up with everything new in the city.

They had a feeling that signs of new technology are creeping into Sana'a. Original tribal norms and conventions are no longer felt as much. "Jawf has an incomparable beauty," one of them

Talk on tribal norms in Yemeni society took up the beginning of the jour-

Dry as a bone

The car took us up and down the hills and plains of Barat. The road was long, bumpy and dusty.

The land is so barren that there are huge cracks in it. It is covered with heaps of dirt and rough rocky terrains.

You can see in Barat untidy wooden buts built in crooked lines, and mud houses. For about eight years, the land of Barat has not had even a single drop

That barren land has deeply affected day-to-day behavior. The people are as tough as their lands.

Just keep on indulging rough and tough talk. There is no room for laughing or cracking of jocks. I could hardly see smiling, innocent faces.

As a genuine tribesman, you have to show a strong adherence to the tribe's norms and conventions. Being a yesman, means that you are under the Sheikh's thumb. He can settle disputes among tribesmen. That's why the government has little control over the east-

Each tribal society in Yemen has its own set of conventions and norms, which each individual is supposed to conform to. In Barat, I was able to see people from different ages carrying weapons and parading around the dis-

People there feel proud of their weapons. These evil machine "weapons" have become the main concern of tribesmen there. They don't think of buying presents or clothes for their kids, except hankering after rounds of ammunition and bullets. That was what I could detect in the company of the two nomads from al- Jawf.

It is astonishing to see them grasping their gun machines proudly in the face of being thoroughly frisked at military checkpoints outside Sana'a. Policemen at those checkpoints lack guts and never have the nerve to stop those who

It is easy for every one to hide a gun machine or anything more than that without even being inspected. It is a piece of cake, isn't it? Tribesmen are totally conversant with different kinds of weapons. I was also surprised to hear they possess not only light weapons, but heavy ones.

Each tribesman has a "complete arsenal". Their utmost dream is to possess different but sophisticated light and heavy weapons. They are fully armed and ready at any time for fighting or shooting.

Notorious spot

Tribesmen are not in al-Jawf's adjacent districts only, but also in the whole eastern desert. Areas have become a safe haven and magnet for kidnapping.

If we look back, we see that the Barat itself is notorious for violence incidents.

Man's best friend: The Kalashnkov, along with the Jambia, is worn by men and kidnapping operations. On July 15, 1999, four Belgian tourists along with their driver were kidnapped from Amran, 40 km. north of Sana'a and after four weeks. On October, 30, 1997, Steve Carpenter was kidnapped from Sana'a and taken to Barat. He was released after four weeks also.

taken to Barat. They were released and regarded as a symbol of manhood.

Such kidnapping incidents are maneuvered from Sana'a to press for projects and financial gains for kidnappers. In addition to this, the assassination of the great Yemeni revolutionary figure, Mohammed Mahmoud

Azzubeiri also took place in Barat. To sum up, this area and the entire eastern region prone to such violent Ouestions of why arise.

One reason is that these areas have been deprived of developmental and social services for a long time. Lack of educational facilities, shortage of water, and want of health care facilities are some other factors leading to the outbreak of violence.

It is heartening to note that some developmental projects for these areas have been implemented, but some are also discontinued. Beneficial projects are grossly inadequate.

The need of the hour is to extend and implement such projects in order to bring this remote district into the national mainstream.

An overview of a rich history (Part 3 of 3)

Maldivean royal searches for Yemeni roots

By IRENA KNEHTL* FOR THE YEMEN TIMES

The Maldive mystery from Hadramaut starts unfolding

Excerpts from correspondence visited your web site and found it interesting. I lived in the Maldives Luntil part of the way through high school and came here to New Zealand in 1974 to finish school and attend university. I returned to the Maldives for about 5 years but came back here in 1988. I am teacher by profession originally teaching economics, but now teaching UT.

My mother had a very good personal library consisting of just about every book, magazine and newspaper ever published in the Maldives. I used to read her book and that was how I became interested in history. My mother died about 11 years ago.

You have mentioned having a slave as a guardian who used to tell you stories about Maldives and this is how you got interested in Maldives in first place. It is interesting that some countries did not banned slavery until recently or never banned it at all. My father used to tell me that his grandfather had African slaves. It was not uncommon for wealthy Maldivian even in the early twentieth century to return from Haj with concubines who were of a nationality called circasian. They looked European.....

Thor Hyerdahl

I note that you studied in Norway and met Thor Hyerdahl known for his Kon Tiki expedition and author of the book The Maldive Mystery. I also met him, when he was in the Maldives. A very interesting person. Very close to his death I wrote to him about an old Maldivian poem which is believed to be fiction He took some interest but I heard of his death soon after. I suspect the poem was written based on some ancient historical fact. It talks of two goddesses, one in Siam, roughly what is now Thailand, and the other in Musimbi thought to be Mozambique. They maintained contact with each other via the Maldives.

Perhaps pre-Columbian ocean trav-

Yemen in Indonesia

My mothers grandfathers grandfather was supposed to be a Moosa Baalawi from Hadramaout. Is there such place in Yemen.

Did you know that there is quiete a sizeable Yemeni community in what is now Indonesia. When I was a student in Wellington, in New Zealand, I was surprised to find a Yemeni student called Mohamed Shaiban who communicated fluently with Indonesians in the Indonesian language. Upon asking he said that he was brought up in Indonesia in a Yemeni community.

Some of these people must have passed through the Maldives

Poetry

Am glad you had a look at my late brothers poetry. I have to work a bit on the pages. My brother was one of those people who would not have lasted as you may be able to tell from some of his poetry. There is a double meaning in the most of his poems and sense of humor too. There is also a philosophical element. He makes a good social commentary. It would be really good if am able to trace my mothers Hadrami connections. Am looking forward to hear from you soon....

Family name

Many thanks for explaining the meaning of Baalawi. Of course, it makes sense now. I did know about the use of Ba and Bar by some Middle Eastern peoples as a kingship term in their names. However, I never thought that Baalawi was the family name of BaAlawi.

My grandfather like many Maldivians had an Arabic name as well as a Divehi name. His Divehi name was Bodufenvalhugey Seedi and his Arabic name was Hussain bin Mohammed al-Hussein. I look forward to the BaAlawi story from you....

Majid,

What follows here are references to the BaAlawi family of Hadramaut was able to gather from from different English and Arabic sources as well as personal communications. They offer some perspective into the Indian Ocean politics, a real Indian Ocean dialogue and cooperation.

Statesmen of the Indian Ocean The BaAlawi of Hadramaut -

Having laid down their arms and given up political struggle, the Alawiyun became the carriers of a Sufi tariqa. The Second stage was that of the development and consolidation of alTariqa alAlawiya, the Alawi Sufi order, which lasted from the seventh century to the eleventh century A.H., 13-17th century A.D. The tariqa was a simple one which did not have khalw, seclusion for purposes of spiritual exercises, and did not denounce worldly activities. The third stage lasted from eleventh to the fourteen century A.H, later 17th to 20the century A.D. During this period the Alawi ulama and awlija, saints, came to be known by the title of habib. This was the period of emigration to India and Southeast Asia...

Hadrami Arab and Indian Muslim traders has been engaging in trade and missionary activities in the region for centuries and constituted an integral part of the Muslim trade diaspora which stretched from Egypt to the Malay world. Today the whole of the Hadrami hierarchical segmend is still represented in Africa. At the top of the social hierarchy, the sharifs that are best known are AlSaqqaf, BaAlawi and AlAydarus. By playing on their prestige and by means of marriages contracted with ruling families, the sheriffs were able to establish political bases or take possession of power structures wherever they settled. There are numerous and often significant examples of their influence in the political domain. For example that BaAlawi sultans were secured in the Comoros, Kilwa, Zanzibar, Tumbatu and at Vumbaktu.... Members of the BaAlawi lineage continue to exercise various degrees of religious, social and political influence in late 20 century Kerala... Further south in the then Italian port of Mogadishu in 1891 one of the major chiefs was Sayyid Ahmed BaAlawi whose ancestor had come from Tarim seven generations earliers....Imam Abdalla ibn Alawi AlHadad published The Book of Assistance for Moslems, born in Tarim in the hills of Hadramaut. His ances tors The Alawi Sadda had for centuries produced generation after generation of great scholars, and Gnostics and sumnoners to the straight path.... Certainly no aristocracy so widely disseminated over Asia and Africa playing century upon century an important and consistent role in the Islamic community nor can any branch of the numerous Sharif and Sayyid families founded over 14 centuries ago claim a more varied sphere of activity of achievement than the Alawi Sayyids of Hadramaut.... The first focus of Sayyid emigrants eastwards from the Middle Ages was India. They settled in important commercial, cultural and political center, like Bijapur, and Surat, Ahmedabad, Haiderabad, Gujerat, Delhi, Calicut, Malibar... but the greatest emigrations of all were to Java, Sumatra, Atcheh and Malaya.... The Alawi Sayyids arrived there some time before the Dutch. An Alawi from Johore settled in Maindanao, marrying the Sultans daughter.....

22 generations later

Hi iren, got your mail. Just having a visit from two of my in laws. I look forward to hear more about the BaAlawi connection, Forgot to tell you earlier that my fathers lineage is from a person called Moslim Abbas of Hilaaly. He lived around the year 1300 and I am 22 generation from him the king- sultans of the Maldives since 14the century. His son married a member of a ruling dynasty called the Moon. The Soma dynasty reigned for many generations before becoming Moslims....

Maldives in Brief

The Republic of Maldives is a group of islands lying in the Indian Ocean south west of Sri Lanka and south of the Indian sub continent stretching 800 km in length and 130 km in width comprising of 1190 coral islands with only 202 inhabited. Each island is surrounded by a shallow lagoon which is enclosed by a coral riff providing protection from the sea.

The population is 213.215 of which about 56.000 live in the capital Male being the trading center.

Being on the equator, the monsoons

The Maldivians are a mixed race.

Through out the Maldives Dhivehi, a language which belongs to the Indo-Iranian group of language is spoken.

The newly independent Maldives changed from Sultanate to a Republic on 11th November, 1968.

Maldivians are sunni Moslem. Islam is the religion of the State and the backbone of society.

The National Emblem of the Republic of Maldives comprises a Coconut Palm, Crescent and Star.

The economy is based on three principal activities, fishing, tourism, and shipping. Poor soil and limited availability of cultivable land limit agriculture. Traditional industry consists of local boat building, handicraft such as mat- weaving, jewellery making and lacquer work. Export oriented industries include tuna fish canning, and manufacture of garments.

The Maldives is a member of U.N. and most of specialized agencies. Maldives has diplomatic relations with over hundred countries. The country

Australia reels from one tragedy to another

Eight dead, two injured in Sydney rail crash

SYDNEY, Feb 1 (Reuters) - The death toll from Australia's worst rail crash in 26 years was revised down to eight from nine following confusion over accounting for the bodies, the rail operator said on Saturday.

Heather Gilmore, a spokeswoman for the operator City Rail, said there had been some confusion in identifying body parts that made it difficult to determine the number of dead.

"They don't expect the death toll to rise anything more than eight," she

Two people, down from four, were still listed as critically injured following Friday morning's rush-hour crash in rugged bushland 40 km (25 miles) south of Sydney, a New South Wales Health department spokesman said.

The remoteness of the location made rescue efforts difficult. Emergency crews had to trek 1.5 km (one mile) along dirt trails to reach the mangled four-carriage train in a ravine. The last body was removed on Saturday morning.

One of the train's carriages, which slammed into a sandstone embankment, was removed overnight. The train will be taken to Sydney to be rebuilt for a reenactment of the crash.

Investigators into the crash found the train's black box recorder had not been switched on, potentially depriving them of crucial information to back up passengers' comments the train appeared to speed up just before it derailed.

But New South Wales state transport minister, Carl Scully, said black boxes on the state's trains were still being tested, so the recorder on the crashed train had not been activated yet. "There is no useful information on it and it was not operational because it hadn't yet been verified and modified in accordance with those earlier tests to make the information reliable," Scully said on national radio.

Rail operators had been installing black box data recorders on trains following recommendations from an inquiry into a train crash outside Sydney in 1999.

About 70 people were on board the train as it travelled south from Sydney to Port Kembla near Wollongong on the south coast when the crash happened.

Separate inquiries — by a judge, a coroner and a rail safety group — would be held into the incident, New South Wales Premier Bob Carr announced on Friday.

State rail safety regulator Kent Donaldson said the probe would include looking into how fast the train was travelling when it passed two signals, the condition of the track, the condition of the carriages, and the signalling system.

Friday's accident was Australia's worst train crash since January 1977 when 83 people were killed at Granville west of Sydney.

India raps U.S. over Iraq, Pakistan policy

BANGKOK, Feb 1 (Reuters) - India urged the United States on Saturday not to attack Iraq, even if it has evidence Baghdad is hiding weapons of mass destruction, saying a war must be avoided at all costs.

Indian Deputy Prime Minister L.K. Advani, on a swing through Southeast Asia after visiting Europe and the Middle East, said there was growing opposition around the world to any unilateral U.S. action.

"Iraq must give up its weapons of mass destruction, but even if it fails to do so the action that should be taken should be decided by the United Nations, not by any country unilaterally," Advani told a news conference in Bangkok.

"A war should be avoided," he said.
"When I visited Paris, I found that France and Germany had similar views."

Advani's appeal came after U.S. President George W. Bush rejected on Friday any bid to delay disarming Iraq, saying a new Security Council resolution authorizing war would be welcome but not necessary.

Bush, along with his main ally, British Prime Minister Tony Blair, warned that the Iraq crisis would come to a head in a matter of weeks, rather than months.

Advani also said India was disappointed by Washington's support for Pakistan as a key ally in its war on terror in neighbouring Afghanistan.

"We are disappointed with their approach," he said.

"We do expect countries which have sworn to fight against terrorism, wherever it is, at least not to help any state, financially or otherwise, which promotes terrorism directly or indi-

Thais refuse entry for Cambodian opposition chief

BANGKOK, Feb 1 (Reuters) -Thailand said on Saturday it had refused entry to Cambodian opposition leader Sam Rainsy, sending him back to Singapore after briefly detaining him on arrival at Bangkok's international airport.

"Sam Rainsy is on a Thai Airways plane for Singapore which is taking off now," Government Spokesman Sita Divari told Reuters.

"This is Thai government policy. We are temporarily not allowing any Cambodians into Thailand."

Thailand barred entry to Cambodians this week after anti-Thai riots in Phnom Penh destroyed the Thai embassy and more than a dozen Thai-related businesses.

The violence led to Thailand evacuating hundreds of its citizens and downgrade diplomatic relations. Sam Rainsy was due to hold a news conference at a Bangkok hotel on Saturday about the rioting.

"Sam Rainsy is a political figure, who wanted to come to Thailand to give a press conference and Thailand has been damaged enough by Cambodia...we are afraid it might trigger more chaos, so we must send him out of Thailand," the spokesman said

A senior Thai police official told Reuters earlier that Sam Rainsy, who arrived on a Thai Airways flight from Singapore, was detained for more than an hour on arrival at Bangkok's airport and stopped from travelling

Angry crowds that gathered outside the embassy, burning pictures of Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen and pulling the sign off the mission's gate, dispersed overnight after a plea for calm by Thailand's King Bhumibol Adulyadej, a rare intervention by the world's longest reigning monarch.

US warns North Korea

WASHINGTON/SEOUL. Feb 1 (Reuters) - U.S. spy satellites show North Korea is moving fuel rods around a key nuclear complex, including possibly some of the 8,000 spent fuel rods that experts consider a key trip-wire in bomb-building, U.S. officials said.

But there was no sign that crucial reprocessing of those spent fuel rods had begun, they said.

In another ominous sign that North Korea's nuclear crisis might be deepening, the commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific had asked the Pentagon for more troops, aircraft and warships to deter any "adventure" by North Korea if the United States goes to war against Iraq, other U.S. officials said.

But South Korea said on Saturday it had not confirmed the U.S. satellite intelligence showing North Korea was moving fuel rods around its Yongbyon nuclear complex and had not been informed of any U.S. request to augment its 37,000 troops in the South.

There was also no immediate reaction from North Korea to the U.S. intelligence report or the request for U.S. reinforcements.

If confirmed, moves by North Korea to launch production of nuclear weapons would mark a major step in the nuclearization of North Asia, where nuclear-armed China fears Japan might develop the weapons in response to North Korea's possession of them.

The North Korean move would also be a major test of South Korean President Kim Dae-jung's "sunshine policy" of trying to engage the isolated, communist North.

The Korean crisis was sparked last October when the United States said Pyongyang had admitted to developing a highly enriched uranium programme in violation of a 1994 accord, under which the North froze its nuclear programme in exchange for two nuclear energy reactors and economic assistance.

Pyongyang expelled U.N. nuclear inspectors and removed seals from a mothballed reactor in December. Last month, the North pulled out of the treaty preventing the spread of nuclear arms.

"Not good"

Even as they try to keep the North Korea crisis on a diplomatic track, Bush administration officials seem increasingly convinced that Pyongyang is determined to launch full-scale production of nuclear weapons.

As there has been for the past month, "there is still activity around Yongbyon, some of it associated with the reactor, an immediate thing that's not as bad as reprocessing but still isn't good," a senior U.S. official told Reuters.

"I don't discount that they might begin reprocessing in the next month, or do another missile launch," but there were no signs of preparations for such a test, he said.

Another official told Reuters Yongbyon was "bustling with activity. There are canisters and vehicles moving about. It's hard to rule in or out that spent fuel rods are on the move but it's certainly plausible."

U.S. officials in recent weeks have detected that North Korea had moved quantities of fresh fuel rods to the area of a nuclear reactor at Yongbyon. It is in the reactor where the unused uranium fuel rods are converted to plutonium.

An even more significant step would be for Pyongyang to move 8,000 spent fuel rods — which have already gone through the reactor — from a holding pond where they had been mothballed under a 1994 agreement with the United States.

In the nuclear process, spent fuel rods go through a reprocessing facility where the plutonium is extracted to become fuel for nuclear weapons.

"A prudent step"

Fresh fuel rods "probably" have been moved at Yongbyon and spent fuel rods "possibly" have been moved, said one official, noting that intelligence was not clear-cut.

Another official, who initially said he believed the spent fuel rods were still in the cooling pond, later amended his comment, saying: "We don't know" where they are.

The U.S. administration — which has tried to put the issue on the back burner as it concentrates on Iraq — warned North Korea against taking any steps to reprocess plutonium.

"Any steps toward beginning reprocessing would be yet another provocative action by North Korea intended to intimidate and blackmail the international community," presidential spokesman Ari Fleischer told reporters.

He declined to comment on a New York Times report that the stockpile of 8,000 spent fuel rods was being moved. Absent from the spokesman's com-

Absent from the spokesman's comments was any threat of military action if North Korea crosses what experts consider a red line by beginning to reprocess the 8,000 spent fuel rods.

But Admiral Thomas Fargo, based in Hawaii as commander of all American forces in Asia and the Pacific rim, had asked for some additional forces along with B-1 and B-52 bombers to let North Korea know that the United States was prepared for any contingency, U.S. officials said.

"The admiral wants to be sure that the North Koreans don't launch any adventure to take advantage of what they might see as preoccupation with Iraq," said one defense official. "He feels it would be a prudent step."

A South Korean Defense Ministry spokesman said there was no sign of unusual military activity in North Korea, the bulk of whose 1.1 million strong army is deployed near the border with South Korea, 50 km (30 miles) north of the capital, Seoul.

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell took pains to reaffirm that the United States had "no intention of attacking" North Korea and was ready to convey that assurance to Pyongyang in a way "that makes sense and...is unmistak-

Turkey to back U.S. on Iraq

By Steve Bryant

ISTANBUL, Feb 1 (Reuters) -Turkey's influential military has given the reluctant government a firm push towards actively supporting the United States in any war on Iraq, Turkish newspapers said on Saturday. The National Security Council, grouping the military top brass and elected politicians, called on the government on Friday to seek parliamentary authorisation for "military measures" if war erupts in Turkey's southern neighbour

It also called for parliament to invoke an article in the constitution which allows foreign troops to be stationed in Turkey - meeting U.S. requests for its troops to use Turkish bases on their way into northern Iraq.

Turkish commentators said the call by the influential NSC pointed to government backing, however grudging, for a U.S.-led war the government and most Turks fear could prove a disaster.

"According to information from sources at the meeting, if political initiatives fail to produce anything, Turkey will give active support to an international coalition under U.S. leadership," columnist Murat Yetkin wrote in the daily Radikal.

The Justice and Development Party (AKP) government has avoided a clear answer to U.S. requests to use Turkish bases as jumping-off points for a second front in northern Iraq to support a main invasion force in the south.

The AKP, distrusted by the powerful military for its roots in political Islam, fears an unpopular war in Iraq could cost it support, undermine the fragile economy and lead eventually to a destabilising break-up of Iraq.

But pressure is increasing for Turkey to bite the bullet.

Washington is offering billions of dollars in financial support for Turkey to offset the financial impact of war.

"Additionally, Turkey does not want to be out of the loop in order to influence post-war developments and protect Turkey's interests," wrote Fikret Bila in the popular newspaper Milliyet.

The NSC, whose recommendations are taken seriously by all Turkish governments, called for parliament to invoke article 92 of the constitution, which allows Turkish troops to be sent abroad and foreign troops to be stationed on Turkish soil.

"The military...have made known their view that a decision should be taken immediately," said the establishment newspaper Hurriyet, though it added that the AKP was likely to bide

Many expect the government to wait until U.N. weapons inspectors have made their report to the U.N. Security Council on February 14. A Muslim public holiday ending on February 17 could further delay any decision.

The government is unwilling to see large numbers of U.S. troops deployed in Turkey and is seeking the smallest presence with which a second front would still be feasible.

U.S. officials said on Thursday they were considering a staggered deployment that would keep the U.S. presence in Turkey down to around 15,000 to 20,000 troops at any one time.

Iraq threatens suicide attacks against U.S. troops

BERLIN, Feb 1 (Reuters) - Iraq will launch thousands of suicide attackers against American troops if the United States invades, Iraqi Vice President Taha Yassin Ramadan told German magazine Der Spiegel on Saturday.

"We are looking forward to the time when they have finished with air bombardments and send in ground troops against us. They will come up against very hard resistance everywhere," Ramadan told the weekly magazine.

We do not have long-range rockets or bomber squadrons, but we will deploy thousands of suicide attackers... martyrs. These are our new weapons and they will not just be used in Iraq," Ramadan said the United States would be confronted with a "sea of opposition" in the Middle East, particularly in places like Kuwait and Saudi Arabia where U.S. troops were sta-

"The Arab people will stand by the Iraqi people in the battle for its independence and freedom. It will be a conflagration in the entire region," he

"It will be worse for them than ever

Ramadan said talk of Saddam Hussein and other Iraqi leaders going into exile was ridiculous

He said Iraq would cooperate fully with United Nations weapons inspectors. The United States accuses Iraq of amassing weapons of mass destruction and says it will disarm the country by force if necessary.

Part of renewed military crackdown by Israelis

Armed Palestinian killed

GAZA, Feb 1 (Reuters) - Israeli troops shot dead an armed Palestinian in a Gaza Strip border zone on Saturday and imposed a curfew on the West Bank city of Hebron in a renewed military crackdown following Israeli national elections.

An Israeli military source said soldiers spotted an armed Palestinian approaching the Gaza border with Egypt near the volatile town of Rafah and opened fire. The man was carrying an assault rifle and ammunition clips, the source said.

The Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP) identified the dead man as a 19-year-old member of the group, which has carried out attacks on Israelis in a 28month-old Palestinian uprising for

In Hebron, troops imposed a citywide curfew as part of a sweep for Palestinian militants which began on Thursday. A Palestinian woman returning home from hospital was wounded when troops enforcing the curfew shot at her taxi, residents said.

In Israel, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon was set to continue talks on forming a governing coalition after his right-wing Likud party doubled its power to 38 seats in the 120-member parliament in Tuesday's election.

But he faces an uphill battle to create the national unity coalition with the centre-left Labour Party which many Israelis crave as the country faces the uprising and a possible U.S. war on Iraq that could draw Iraqi missile attacks on Israel.

Labour chief Amram Mitzna has vowed to rebuild his shattered party, which lost more than one-quarter of its seats in parliament.

Likud urges Labour to join coali-

Israeli cabinet minister Tzipi Livni warned Labour on Saturday that its determination to stay out of government could pose an obstacle to ending more than two years of bloodshed.

"The political process (of peace talks) will come about only as long as we present a united and clear front and convince the international community so they stand with us...and place a clear responsibility on the Palestinians (to stop violence)," Livni told Israel Radio.

If Labour stays out of government "the Palestinians will think there are other options, that maybe they need to wait for the government to fall, and then we will be dragged into a long, exhausting period of terror," she said.

Sharon held talks on Friday with a prospective coalition partner, Yosef "Tommy" Lapid, pugnacious leader of the centrist Shinui party that finished third in the vote with 15 seats.

Lapid, who opposes state subsidies and military service exemptions for Israel's ultra-Orthodox Jews, has said he would not join a cabinet that includes their political parties but would strive for a secular coalition with Likud and Labour.

Still seeking 'hidden' weapons

U.N. experts continue search of sites in Iraq weapons experts searched more sites on Saturday in their hunt for banned weapons in Iraq as top inspectors deferred a decision about whether to go to Baghdad next week.

Iraqi officials said experts from the U.N. Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) visited at least 10 sites

An UNMOVIC biological team went to three sites in Baghdad and swooped on Saddam's University, the college of education and al-Sharqiyia distillery. A missile team combed the headquarters of al-Karama state company in Baghdad which produces components of al-Samood missiles and assembles other missiles. Another team went to al-Rasheed Factory south of Baghdad which manufactures fuses for artillery munitions.

Inspectors also went to al-Rayyah company in Taji north of Baghdad. Officials did not give details on the facility but it is believed to be Iraq's main site of pre-Gulf War Scud modification and production of al-Hussein missiles, including airframes, warheads and engines.

An IAFA team went to Saddam's University in Baghdad. Another team was conducting an aerial survey, they

U.N. weapons experts also flew helicopters to travel to undisclosed sites in northern Iraq.

Diplomats in New York said on Friday that top inspectors Hans Blix and Mohamed ElBaradei deferred a decision about whether or not they would go to Baghdad, telling Iraq they first wanted signs that it was meeting their disarmament concerns.

They did not flatly turn down an invitation from Iraq, which could take place on February 7 or February 8, or give an ultimatum. But they said they hoped for positive steps from Iraq such as allowing U-2 over flights without conditions and private interviews with scientists, before the meeting took place, the diplomats said.

Blix and ElBaradei last visited Baghdad on January 19-20, when Iraq pledged to step up cooperation with the inspectors, who resumed work on November 27 after a four-year gap.

Thousands rally against Ivory Coast accord

ABIDJAN, Feb 1 (Reuters) - Tens of thousands of protesters poured into Abidjan on Saturday to denounce a French-brokered peace deal for Ivory Coast just as West African mediators prepared a last-ditch rescue mission for the tottering accord.

Saturday's march was the culmination of a week of often violent protests against an agreement that President Laurent Gbagbo's supporters say was forced on him by the former colonial power to the advantage of rebels holding half the country.

There was no immediate sign on Saturday of the stone-throwing youths who attacked France's embassy and army base and then robbed, roughed up and spat on hundreds of terrified French citizens as they tried to escape the mayhem.

"Ivory Coast stand up," chanted the marchers as they jogged or strolled towards central Abidjan in a mass of orange, white and green national colours.

Four months of war in the world's top cocoa grower have their roots in years of growing division between the largely Muslim north, held by the rebels, and the mostly Christian south.

Hundreds of people have been killed and more than one million displaced in the country of 16 million.

The peace deal agreed in France a week ago was meant to end a conflict that threatens the region by giving key government positions to rebels and Gbagbo's political opponents, who dispute his victory in 2000 elections.

"We say no to rebels in our government. For us it would be like handing over to bandits the keys to your house, student leader Charles Ble Goude said on national television as he prepared for Saturday's demonstration.

"This march will show our force, it will show that we are not just a handful of extremists," he said.

Europeans arrive at Abidjan Airport, Feb. 1 to take flights out of the Ivory Coast where the political situation has degenerated. The French Foreign Ministry recommended its citizens to leave the country as angry mobs supporting the President Laurent Gbagbo stormed the Abidjan airport Jan. 31 where French REUTERS cirtizens were trying to flee the country.

In a sign of the deteriorating situation, France has urged its 16,000 citizens to leave if they could. More than 2,500 French troops are in the country to protect foreigners and to police a truce with the three rebel factions.

Diarra, a widely respected former premier from the largely Muslim north who is seen as politically neutral, was stuck in Senegal's capital Dakar after a regional summit.

Regional leaders who met there on Friday urged Gbagbo's government and the rebels to "work together to ensure the scrupulous application" of the accord

Regional mediators were due in Ivory Coast on Saturday to try to persuade Gbagbo to keep the word he gave in Paris.

France has driven home the same message and the United States added its own weight late on Friday.

But if Gbagbo bows to foreign pressure he will face the wrath not only of the protesters but also of several political parties, traditional chiefs and most importantly the army - which has rejected aspects of the accord.

The country is waiting anxiously for Gbagbo to address the nation about the accord. Since returning home from Paris he has referred to the accord as "proposals" and promised not to betray his supporters.

South African minister warns against Iraq war

ADDIS ABABA, Feb 1 (Reuters) South Africa's foreign minister opened a special session of the African Union in Addis Ababa on Saturday with a warning that any war in Iraq will cause serious problems for African economies. South Africa raised its latest opposition to a U.S.-led war on Iraq within hours of a planned meeting between South African President Thabo Mbeki and British Prime Minister Tony Blair, who is the staunchest backer of Washington's Iraq

"The looming war over Iraq will have serious repercussions for all of us, not only for peace in the world. I am quite sure that it will also have economic impact on our countries," said South African Foreign Minister Nkosazana Dlamini Zuma.

"Especially if the price of oil during the war would go up, most of our countries would have serious problems," Zuma told the one-day meeting of African Union (AU) ministers, being held ahead of an AU heads of state meeting which starts on Monday.

Zuma, who is chairing the AU ministers' meeting, called on African states to continue supporting the efforts of the United Nations Security Council to disarm Iraq of any weapons of mass destruction and avert war. "We have to continue cooperating with the Security Council, because we need peace not war," she said. Mbeki, who was due to meet Blair at his Chequers residence outside London on Saturday, warned last month that a U.S.-led war on Iraq threatened to kill off development in Mbeki's opposition to an Iraq war is backed firmly by former South African president Nelson Mandela, who said on Thursday that U.S. President George W. Bush had no foresight and could not think properly.

Nigerian: More ethnic clashes

WARRI, Nigeria, Feb 1 (Reuters) -Street clashes between rival ethnic gangs in the southwestern Nigerian oil city of Warri have left several people dead, residents said on Saturday.

Political tension is mounting as Africa's most populous nation of more than 120 million people heads for presidential elections in April, the first poll to be supervised by civilian authorities in more than 20 years.

Residents said between four and eight people, including a soldier, died in fighting between Itsekiri and Urhobo youths on Friday. Many others were injured, while about 10 houses were torched.

Consumers lose

Counterfeiting brands: a costly sham

BY IMAD AL-SAQQAF TAIZ BUREAU CHIEF

mitation of products is a big threat in Yemen, says Mohammed Gawad Aghbary, trade manager-importing section in the middle Gast Trading company, comments,

Goods adulteration has spread in Yemen and markets are full of bad and misbranded products, he said.

Consequently, the customer is effected both positively and negatively by products that attempt to prove their presence and try to gain customer trust.

Yemeni industrial and trade authorities admit this problem of trade adulteration and misbranding in a letter from Ministry of Industry and Trade in Taiz addressed to the industry branch.

It points to the existence of commodities, electronic goods, building materials, spare parts and so on that have entered the country through normal inlets and through customs offices.

Some are Chinese, Indian, and Taiwanese goods, labeled as Japanese, German and Italian and other well-reputed countries in the industry for the purpose of cheating citizens.

The office of Industry and Trade in Taiz has been exerting efforts to fight the phenomenon, but faces many difficulties because there is not a clear law on punishing the guilty.

Engineer Gamal Mohammed Abdulrahman, the General Manager of Yemen Meteorology for Standardization & Specifications, Taiz office, defines commercial cheating as adding a variant substance to the natural substance of the commodity, or removing one of the crucial elements, substituting it with a second-rate element. So it hides the low quality of the product and make it appear as a high quality one.

They also add some cheaper material to the ingredients of the product for increasing its quantity. Cheating also done by changing the expiry date of products or reducing its weight and size.

One reason behind commercial cheating, he said is that "increasing demand of customers and variety of products and the technical development has greatly assisted to the spreading of the cheating phenomenon in many developing coun-

Mr. Jamal M. Abdulrahmar

Mr. Mohammed Gawad

Dr. Abdu Ali, the manager of quality in the Yemeni Company for Industry and Trade, confirmed local products are often of higher quality than the imported which most of them are of low quality and not meeting specifications.

Dr. Ali also confirmed that what helps spreading the misbranding is absence of control on the market that is full with such commodities. Inspection requires qualified people.

Closing of smuggling outlets and providing modern laboratories to examine imported products are some of the most effective measures to be taken for fighting such a dangerous phenomenon.

The efforts exerted by the standardization and specifications authority in Yemen confirm its serious endeavor for adopting a Yemeni standard specification.

Engineer Abdulrahman says to fight smuggling and expired goods and commercial adulteration, we have to activate the laws, and spread awareness among consumers.

In most cases, these products were not passed through any quality checks and it's doubtful whether it is fit for human consumption. Therefore, consumption of such products for a long time may create serious health problems.

Most of the consumers, especially people in the rural areas are not aware about the duplication, or they may not be able to recognize it as these products almost look like the original one.

Those who import/distribute duplicate products will always be thinking how they can utilize properly the popularity of the original products to make easy money and are not really bothered about the quality and bad effects of such prod-

Moreover, since these duplicate products are entirely different in all respects compared to the originals, it can create a bad impression about the efficacy of the original products.

These unscrupulous traders/businessmen must know the effort, time and money spent to introduce, establish and maintain the position of a product/brand in the market, which they spoil in few months.

This tendency of imitating the products has recently increased as certain people always think to make easy money in a short span of time. In this process, they do not think about their brothers, sisters and children who are going to suffer by consuming this kind of products or what damage they do in the business sector.

They must realize that by involving such activities they are not only against the entire business ethics, but also spoiling the image of our country in front of other nations

There is no hard and fast rule in our country to stop such unethical business practice unlike our neighboring countries. It is our strong suggestion that it is the time our government has to think of making suitable legislation in order to fight such duplicate products.

People who are involved in such activities should be identified and punished severely to save the interest of business community and the common people of this country.

Poverty, privatization, exports and stock exchange

Yemen prioritizes 2003 economic goals

BY YEMEN TIMES STAFF

group of economic dossiers have been introduced to Yemen for 2003. The major ones are the work for mobilizing potentials and assistance to begin implementation of a national strategy for fighting poverty, taking further steps to complete on privatization, development of exports, and working for establishing a stock-exchange market with the aim of attracting investments and activating the tourist sector.

The poverty fighting file acquires the priority for the aggravation of its phenomena on poor and needy families and adopts a strategy supported by donor countries which includes the tackling of relevant areas:

The first is to limit the problem of unemployment, creating job opportunities and broaden the net of social safety. The second is to improve serv-

The third is to sol

The third is to solve the problem of water by building dams and barriers and rationalize the consumption of subterranean waters.

The fourth is to improve and develop education services in the elementary stage and the eradication of adult

The fifth is organizing reproductive health and reduce the rate of population growth.

The sixth is the establishment of technical and engineering institutes and centers for training labor on professional skills.

Scoring new growth rates in these fields is considered a test for the government before the donors who have praised the strategy concerning poverty and contributed to financing plans for social development at Paris Conference that granted Yemen $ 2.3 billion to maintain its economic reforms and combating poverty.

The government is in 2003 facing the task of finishing implementation of its program of privatizing the establishments that constitute a burden on the state general budget and to work on treating the negative results on labor at the establishments offered for sale.

Part of this program is the responsibility for evaluating what has been privatized of establishments that in 2002 included selling and liquidation of government ownership of establishments such as: overland transportation establishment, Yemeni company for drugs industry, grains establishment for external trade and the industrial complex.

On instructions of the World Bank, Yemen, through carrying out the privatization program, would be able to reduce deficit of the general budget and develop productive performance of the state establishments offered for selling and render their ownership to the private sector. The private sector would in turn work for modernizing ways of administration and machinery of factories and productive companies. It would have to solve the problem of wages of workers at those installations. The private sector should also offer social and health security for the workers and creation of new job opportunities for the unemployed.

The government has a priority in the development of external exports in the year 2003 to achieve the following benefits:

- obtaining secured revenues from non-inflationary sources,
- increasing industrial, agricultural and animal production,
- entering in trade partnership with foreign markets, especially the neighboring countries,
- finding sources for income outside oil exports which are exposed to fluctuation of oil prices in world markets.

Government sources see that the developing of exports needs attraction of domestic, Arab and foreign capitals for developing productive installations and exploitation of local resources to increase production surplus with the aim of dealing with foreign markets,

For this reason the government would, according to the investment law, offer facilities to investors in productive sectors for encouraging exports and realizing financial proceeds. But attracting capitals for investment in these sectors needs the establishment of a stock-exchange market giving them confidence in using their money and transferring their profits via a banking market.

So the government faces the task of completing its efforts for inaugurating the stock market this year to guarantee influx of capitals for investment in available opportunities in Yemen.

The success of the government in implementing these priorities would finish the most important economic files that would lead to prosperity of the society, attract capitals and improve economic performance in the country.

The Road Ahead

Banking for economic development

By RAIDAN A. AL-SAQQAF r_saqqaf@hotmail.com

banker is one who accepts deposits for the purpose of lending and investments in order to make a good utilization of money collected and deposited and hence take part in the economic development of the nation.

However, the key factor for success in banking is collecting and accumulating money from the public cheaply and lending it out at a price as high as possible with the least risk involved in order to keep the cost of capital to the bank to a minimum and the return to a maximum.

Yet, banking appears to be a fully complicated system requiring immense efforts to understand and deal with. In a sense this is true, but still; for a banker to encourage more people to take loans, he has to shift his orientation from the security being offered and how much profits the bank is going to make, to the purpose of the loan; how will giving this loan help in the economic development of the individual and the nation?

Another point is that only those who have and are willing to offer securities to the bank can get the loan, and in turn utilize this money in further investment and so on. In other words those who are rich enough to offer suitable securities can avail of the credit facilities of the bank while other people can't. And as a result, the rich get richer while others don't even if they have the ideas, qualifications and experience.

In addition to that, in the last couple of decades there hasn't been even growth in our urban and rural areas. For example, the number of business transactions in the urban areas have increased at a much higher rate than those in the rural areas. How can we develop our country if we only focus on the urban and neglect the rural areas where at least 60% of our population live?

Therefore, it is crucial that we improve our economic situation through providing credit to those who need it in order to start new small-scale businesses and shift the focus from giving credit to big industries and those who can offer big securities to small scale businesses which have a good purpose and are likely to succeed even though they can't offer much of a security.

That, and that only will help create more income for the business, more employment and business opportunities, and help the economic revival and development of our country. This is the role banking should play in our economic development.

Remember: Bankers can help economic revival through shifting focus to the purpose of the loan rather than the securities offered, to motivate those with good business ideas to ask for loans and start new small businesses. This in turn will help improve the standard of living and provide employment.

Words of Wisdom

If anybody wants to help Yemen, they should assist us in installing a system of accountability - full accountability. Until that is done, we cannot really speak of development or reform. Yemen does need help, but it should be in strengthening our judicial and parliamentary organs, which have been brutally marginalized by the executive

OUR OPINION

U.S 'values' in the trash

The last few weeks have demonstrated to me that the millions of people opposing war against Iraq are right and thoughtful people. We saw how the superpower of the world the USA, has exerted great pressure on many European countries to adopt its position. And it succeeded!

It has become clear that the overwhelming military force of the USA is prepared for war at any time. Whether it is right or wrong, the USA seems committed to it regardless of the UN Security Council's lack of approval.

Let us imagine that a weak country defied the UN Security Council's will and attacked another sovereign cour try. How would the world react? The attacking country will immediately be punished through sanctions and other mean including military force.

Well, now what if the US attacks Iraq? Will the Security Council punish the US by applying sanctions or forcing it to withdraw its forces from Iraq? It seems to be a funny question as the Security Council and UN will have to look for another headquarters as it wouldn't suit them to continue to stay in the country that defies their will.

It is clear that most citizens of the world don't understand how Iraq could be a major threat to the USA, but ever if it does constitute a threat, does that mean that the US has the right to apply preventive measures by attacking it?

Look at European leaders one after another supporting the US without the approval of their people, and perhaps ou of the fear of the consequences after a possible victorious U

Is this the democracy that they are calling for Arab nations to adopt? On the other hand, countries that will not support aggression against Iraq, including Germany and France, will suffer from isolation and punishment by the superpower of the world. Why? Because they did not sup-

Looking at what are supposedly 'American ' values: jus tice, democracy, freedom - which the US administration has been repeating over and over again, we can see them fading in front of the whole world.

They're turning into decoration and occasional propaganda tools used by the US whenever they serve its interest But when they don't, they are thrown to the trashcan. Is this the ideal world of nobility and harmony that we all want to

I just cannot imagine how Americans can believe that their government and leaders support and approve those val ues, yet act in such a fashion. As a matter of fact, this cannot be the case because I received and continue to receive statements of Americans opposing this action. Americans, as peo ple, are great. It is a shame that their government is commit ting such action on their behalf.

It seems to be a wild world, a world where the strong dominates and imposes his will on all the rest. I just wish I wasn't alive to see this day.

Playing the hostage game

By HASSAN AL-ZAIDI

he taking of hostages in tribal areas is still a worry among security authorities and human rights and freedom activists in Yemen. This method has been one of the systems that Yemen's former Imam regime

The revolutionaries, who tried to bomb the 26th September, also used this method as one of the means to put an end to Imam regime.

Zaid Mutea Dama'ag, one of the well-known intellectuals and novelists, composed a famous novel called "Hostage"

Yemen's Imam regime forced every tribe in Yemen to submit a hostage called an "obedience hostage," to force those tribes to avoid any rebellion and disobedience.

It was asked from each tribe to necessarily submit additional hostages called 'sympathy hostages' in case one of its individuals made any violation.

Perhaps this system, which violates rights and freedom, was taken in the Imam's security procedures in order to serve its domination and sovereignty. The tribal society was governed by strict norms and traditions that prevented rebellion or attack against a a tribe with a hostage.

The tribal norm obliged every one to pay the cost of the hostage with a hostage "fine".

Currently, society believes that this system is one of the negative aspects of Imam tyrannical rule. However, we find that the authorities bring it back to existence in many cases and events that happen in Yemen. This is in spite of the obvious and bold violation of the constitution, laws and national and international convention related to human

This distorts Yemen's image in front of the public and the local and international world.

Here I will cite some examples of using this technique.

There was a conflict between the security and the Abeeda tribe at the end of 2001 to hunt down "Abu Asem" The security forced the Abeeda tribe to submit fifty hostages from its clans who were released just last November.

And the event of putting five persons from al-Zaidi tribe and I behind the bars in December 1997 in one of the capital prisons for three months considering us as hostages is still in memory as well as the other events that happened and still happen so far.

Perhaps this method is taken currently by the authorities. It is considered unsuccessful and mistaken that does not serve the security and stability because most tribal members in the meantime do not respect the norms and traditions that the Imam used to exploit them in imposing his control.

What happens when there is a problem, or anyone who belongs to a special tribe has done something wrong, is that everyone belonging to this tribe or area

They're considered a hostage because the behavior of outlaws from his clan or tribe. That creates resentment for the peaceful and secured members.

That's also violation of the valid constitution laws.

A lot of the tribes consider that what security authorities do in these cases is not different from the kidnapping that some tribes practice.

The process of kidnapping and counter-kidnapping happens among a few members that belong to special tribes aiming to get things from the government.

So is kidnapping secured citizens from the roads, towns and streets and putting them in the prisons under the pretexts tribal belonging?

These methods and procedures are against the constitutions and laws. We find the continuity of this phenomenon in spite of political opposition. However, it seems that the problem is the result of government weakness.

Some see that it is a result of fair and just procedures and solutions for problems while others think it is a result of misbehavior for security that has no system and plan for the government to take. Others believe it is a result of authorities and Sheiks seeking for a return to Imam traditions

Thus, we still need to find solutions to put an end to the violations that within this. There is injustice and confiscating of human rights.

COMMON SENSE By Hassan Al-Haifi

Rough times are ahead

n reflecting on the recent developments in the region, it seems clear that the region is not geared for any rest from tumult, disappointment and tragedy. For one thing we have a demagogic hawk for a president of the United States, who has no other direction to go except war to solve all the elements of an apparent disability to bring verve back into the mainstream of American economic life.

After the sad events of September 11, 2001, President Bush has seen no other means of convincing the American people that the United States is well on its way of coming out of the shock of the tragedy. His miscalculated efforts in Afghanistan have not brought about the fully opted for goal of liquidating the alleged culprits of that horrific event. Because there is so much weaponry of mass and no so mass destruction in the United States, Bush thinks that unleashing some of that hardware here and there is bound to bring an end to the difficulties he is facing domestically, of an economy that seems unsteady and unsure of the course its President is taking.

In any case, that is as far as the United States is concerned. In the region, it is clear that the other demagogic hawk of the world, Bush's "good friend" has been given a mandate to proceed with his relentless destruction of whatever remains Palestine. The poor Palestinian people have nothing to look for in the future, as they see a White House Administration that has not only let them down, but apparently supports all the madness that they have been seeing.

Ever since Ariel Sharon decided to take on any hopes for peace in the region with his intimidating walk through the Al-Aqsa Mosque at the turn of the Millennium to remind the Palestinians - and the rest of the world that Zionist demagogues have a whole different outlook on the way things should proceed in the region, and it is not towards peace. Bloodshed was the cause d'etre of the State of Israel and it is bloodshed that it must thrive on to exist!

What a whole different atmosphere has Ariel Sharon and his unfailing backers in the international Zionist establishment produced in the region! We are baffled by the blindness, which the Bush administration seems to view this region, relying on misguided aspirations of the many strong Zionist demagogues within his administration, who will believe anything Ariel Sharon and his backers in the Zionist lobby in the United States, who enjoy seeing every bit of blood of innocent Palestinian children shed in the Holy

For these demagogues, American interest and the interests of peace in the world are the last things in their mind, as they clandestinely railroad the United States into a world of mayhem and confusion, inspired by an obvious incoherent foreign policy that is resolved to convince the world that there is nothing that stands in the way of the power of the sword. We really do not understand how America can expect to see a world approving of such misguided approach to foreign policy, with the only winner in it being the Zionist interests that have infiltrated every facet of American economic, political and social fabric, who care the least for American interests or for world peace.

The people of the region seem to be heading for further tragedy, now that Sharon is firmly entrenched in his operations room for the destruction of the Palestinian people. With Bush driven by the strong Zionist elements that plague his administration, we should expect any surprises to confront us from where we least expect them. The demagogues are firmly in place to decide the fate of an already overburdened world with problems. Carry on Ariel, for the White House is right behind you and frankly speaking there is nothing that anybody can hope for with the atmosphere in the world needing some fumigation from all this demagoguery in the air.

Can Yemen do it too?

BY JAMES WILLAMAN VOLANT, PA USA

n response to 'Lessons from World War II' editorial (Jan. 27) first of all, let me say that I was moved by its picture of the war's devastation on those two countries but I also became deeply sympathetic to the hopes and dreams expressed in it for the Yemeni people. Let me also say that I agree with the author and that there are many similarities between modern Yemen and postwar Germany and Japan.

And, just like Germany and Japan the obstacles to your vision of Yemen are surmountable with public consensus on your side and international help.

Nothing on the magnitude of nation building can be done, however, without the true support of Yemen's people. The great majority, through the equal dissemination of information and the exercise of democracy, must be unified in its vision of the future Yemen and of the path to that future. In short, my answer to the article1s question is, 'Yes Yemen, you can do it... if you want to.

With the new 'war on terror' focusing the world1s attention on the Persian Gulf region, Yemen has a perfect opportunity to emulate Cold War era West Germany and to benefit from international aid and investment.

The risk of openly accepting such aid is, of course, an anti-western backlash which could destabilize the government, sever ties with the west, and retard economic growth. The tightrope is narrow but the potential rewards of billions of dollars in aid and the political consolidation of Yemen's government may be worth the risk.

Your editorial finished with the question 'why not us?' which prompted me to leave with some questions of my own.

1. Can Yemen, including the tribal areas, be effectively unified as one highly organized and highly centralized political body in order to move the country, as a whole, in a single direction?

2. Is the vision of an industrialized and globally integrated Yemen which has a free market system and all the secular and western trappings such developments invariably entails, a vision of Yemen that the people of your country will lend their support

3. Will the Yemeni people be willing to accept the personal and cultural sacrifices that unity calls for in order to enjoy the benefits it will surly bring?

Cancer problem in Yemen How long will we have to wait till the oncology center in Sana,a starts working? Why this delay?

I would like to ask the officials who are responsible toward the establishment of this vital and necessary medical and radiation oncology institute.

Too many Yemenis are sent abroad for treatment -and of course there are those who cannot afford such trips and they end up staying in Yemen and suffering a lot of pain.

I have always said that Yemen needs to improve its cancer care, especially since the number of people with this disease is increasing.

U.S. steps into quagmire

By PATRICK SEALE Gulf News

he Middle East is on the brink of war. Compelling evidence pointing to a coming conflict can no longer be ignored or wished away. Hoping to benefit from an element of surprise, the United States will no doubt keep alive a hint of doubt about its intentions until the very last moment, but all the signs point to an attack on or about February 15.

The U.S. juggernaut has concentrated massive firepower against Iraq. The strike will be swift, surgical and overwhelming. The inescapable conclusion is that Saddam Hussain's regime is living

In his State of the Union address, President George W. Bush announced that Secretary of State Colin Powell would, on February 5, present proof to the Security Council of Iraq's secret weapons and its links to terrorism.

He will seek to make an irrefutable case for war. Wash-ington has already embarked on a multi-million dollar propaganda campaign to convince friends and enemies that Saddam is a menace that must be removed to "liberate" the Iraqis and make the world a safer place.

Hans Blix, the chief UN weapons inspector, has done the Americans' work for them. His report to the Security Council on January 27 detailing Iraq's failure to account for its stocks of anthrax and the deadly VX agent, or to reveal details of its mobile chemical laboratories and missile delivery systems, has bolstered the American position.

It was an even "better" report than the Americans had hoped for. In the American view, the Security Council can now discuss the matter but there will be no need for a new resolution.

In the coming war, America's "coalition of the willing" will include Britain, Australia, Spain, Italy, Poland, Rumania, Bulgaria, Kuwait, Qatar, and no doubt three or four other more reluctant allies.

Attempts to restrain the U.S. by France, Germany, Russia, China, Turkey and the Arab League have failed. Hailed as a triumph of anti-war European diplomacy, UN Security Council Resolution 1441 has in fact provided the political cover for an American military build up.

France has no appetite to use its veto in the Security Council and will, in any event, have no opportunity to do so. Turkey is unable to refuse the U.S. the use of its bases. At their recent conference in Istanbul, Arab foreign ministers did not dare criticise the U.S. but put all the onus on Iraq to avoid war.

Although anxious about the likely emergence of a pro-American regime on its borders, the Iranian leadership will undoubtedly welcome the final demise of its arch-enemy, Saddam. Russia has already softened its opposition to war and warned Iraq that it cannot count on its support.

Bush will evidently not be deterred by the swelling anti-war movement around the world. On the contrary, the hostility of public opinion is driving the Washington hawks to strike sooner rather than later.

It would seem that only the exile or death of Saddam, or an eleventh-hour decision to reveal all his hidden weapons, might now save Iraq. But none of this is plausible.

Just as Saddam in 1991 remained confident until the very last moment that the U.S. would not attack him, so today he has once again failed to heed the signals of imminent conflict. He is likely to lose his regime, perhaps even his life, in trying to hide some trivial weapons of little operational use which are, in any event, dwarfed by American power.

Imperial adventure

imperial adventure, not unlike that of London in the 19th and early 20th centuries, when Britain was the dominant power in Egypt, Iraq, the Gulf, south Arabia and much of the rest of the Bush appears to be convinced that seizing Baghdad, an ancient pole of Arab civilisation, and destroying Saddam, will provide a democratic model for other oppressed Arabs and "jump-start" the refashioning of the Middle East on pro-Western lines.

He seems to believe that it will also deprive terrorist groups of "rogue state" sponsorship, making America safe from another attack, which could be even more deadly than 9/11, because next time weapons of mass destruction might be used. The lure of Iraqi oil must also have entered his calculations.

Nevertheless, there is a strong streak of naïve idealism in Bush's vision. It allays America's fears of its new vulnerability to terror, while flattering its pretension that its power is being used for the benefit of humanity.

Britain's Prime Minister Tony Blair, who in his eagerness to maintain the 'special relationship" has allowed himself to be sucked into America's war plans, is fond of saying, in the teeth of a great deal of contrary evidence, that America is a "force for good" in the

The truth is that Bush has been sold a load of dangerous rubbish. At the heart of the Washington decision-making process lies a cabal of Zionist extremists who have shaped America's political and military agenda, carefully wrapping it in the American flag for the consumption of the president and the public.

A cabal triumphs

Supported by friends and allies in right-wing think tanks, in the press, and in lobbying organisations, this small Washington is about to embark on an group of men has a narrow, Israel-centric umph of this cabal and of its most prominent strategic thinker, Deputy Defence Secretary Paul Wolfowitz.

vision. War against Iraq marks the tri-

For such men, Iraq represents the last major strategic threat to Israel. The aim of the war is to weaken Iraq permanently, by "remaking" it as a loose federal state without a strong centre. Of the other regional threats to Israel, Egypt was taken out of the Arab military equation by its 1979 peace treaty with Israel and has been neutralised ever since by a $2 billion-a-year American subsidy.

Syria, much diminished since the death of Hafez Al-Assad and beset by domestic rivalries, offers no real threat. Iran is a cause of concern to Israel because of its nuclear ambitions and its support for the Hezbollah, but it is a long way from Israel's borders and has worries on other fronts.

In any event, Israel has had close relations with Iran in the past. It trained the Savak secret police under the Shah and supplied Iran with arms during its war with Iraq. Somewhere below the surface is the Israeli hope that ties will one day be revived.

Iraq then is the prime target of Israel and its American friends. It must be punished for daring to attack Israel in 1991. It must be disarmed to protect Israel's regional monopoly of weapons of mass destruction. The overthrow of Saddam would change the strategic horizon. Under the cover of a war intended to enfeeble the whole Arab system, Israel will be able to defeat the Palestinians.

This is the intoxicating vision of the pro-Israeli camp. It is the fervent hope of Ariel Sharon, Israel's prime minister and the champion of a "Greater Israel", now basking in his personal triumph at this week's elections.

The mantra one hears from his advisers is that after the war everything will be different. The road to Jerusalem runs through Baghdad! The Quartet's "road map" to Palestinian statehood by 2005, already dismissed by Sharon, will fade into history like the Mitchell and Tenet

In the meantime settlement building, house demolitions, targeted killings, curfews and closures, the whole cruel panoply of Israeli repression, together with the destruction of every vestige of Palestinian autonomy, will continue unabated until the Palestinians surrender and accept crumbs thrown to them.

There are many things wrong with this scenario. For one thing, the Palestinians show no sign of being beaten into submission. Sharon is a great tactician but a hopeless strategist. As the last two years have shown, he is leading Israel to catastrophe.

He will need to find a Palestinian quisling to implement his plan for the parody of Palestinian "statehood" he envisages defenceless en-claves, cut off from each other, living a half-life at Israel's mercy. But the unfortunate fate of Bashir Gemayyil, Sharon's protégé in Lebanon 20 years ago, is likely to dissuade a potential Palestinian quisling from stepping forward. In the meantime, the suicide bombings will continue.

BY: SAMER A.

The U.S., in turn, is likely to find that pacification of Iraq after the war will be long and expensive. When Israel invaded Lebanon in 1982 it was welcomed at first before being driven out by guerrilla action. U.S. forces are likely to face the same experience in Iraq. Already at risk throughout the region, Americans and American interests could face fresh

In seeking to impose its imperial hegemony on the Middle East, the U.S. could find itself drawn into a new "Vietnam", just when it had recovered from that soul-wrenching experience. The Arab and Muslim world is not ripe for a new colonial experience. Al Qaida is still out there, attracting new recruits by the day and poised to strike again.

'War on Terror' . . or is it?

BY SYED SALAMAH ALI MAHDI

he terrorists who carried out the 9/11 attacks in New York and Washington paid the price for their crimes. operation had a relatively small budget, not requiring the millions in Muslim personal, business or charitable funds now blocked or sequestered by the US government. At the same time, the war waged by the US on terrorism since 9/11 targets all individuals, groups and states who find US policies offensive, irrespective of their involvement in the events of that day. So, what's up, doc?

This is what is up. This war targets foreign governments.

George Bush Sr. is on record: "America must always come first." I have no problem with this patriotic sentiment, but I have severe problems when, in this "must-always-comefirst" business, America is not All of America but special-interest-group-America. These special interest groups - or lobbies - control the means by which politicians are elected to public office. I have no problems with this either. Americans are free to elect whomever they want to public offices. They are also free to choose those who govern them - but I have severe problems when these same officials attempt to extend their authority, scope and power to the world at large.

She is the most powerful

Yes, America is the most powerful military power. Yes, America is the richest country. Yes, without America the likes of Hitler, Stalin and Milosevic would be ravaging the earth. Yes, without American generosity Europe, Japan and much of the world would be struggling for economic and political survival. None of this, however, gives America the right to impose its will on sovereign countries. Since 9/11 a sovereign country has been bombed without a formal declaration of government has been replaced by one of America's choice. The United Nations Security Council has been reduced to the status of the submissive canine seen on "His Master's Voice" phonographs. America has in deed if not in fact declared itself above international law. The German chancellor is being "advised" to be subservient to American foreign policies.

A second sovereign country is about to be carpet bombed with or without United Nations involvement. Legitimate armed resistance to illegal foreign occupation is being called terrorism. Charitable funds of only one religious denomination have been either blocked or sequestered after being unilaterally labeled "terrorist funds". People whose origins are limited to one geographical area are being hunted down and put behind bars without charges or indictments, without recourse to legal representation or bail. Yes, justifications are being offered by the US - a different one each time but the common denominator in each case is "good intentions", never "real intentions". To understand the difference we must recall that a year before 9/11, high-ranking representatives of the now-demonized Taleban were being "courted" in Texas by the US government and the oil lobby. The Americans wanted permission for a transcontinental oil pipeline to run through Afghanistan. Some of those former Afghan negotiators are now in the cages of Guantanamo.

Zionists watching

It would be instructive to remember that just a decade and a half ago, the other demon - Iraq - had dutifully fought America's proxy war for the containment of Iran. While doing so, it emerged as the regional bully with muscles, nuclear technology, chemicals and even germs provided by America. Had Iraq remained loyal and continued promoting America's regional interests without foolishly occupying a neighboring oil-rich country or lobbing some antiquated missiles at Israel, they would have earned the status of one of America's "most favored nations" with state-of-the-art "Made in America" weapons of mass destruction. But as we all know, Iraq chose not to. Misjudging the extent of Zionist (meaning both Jewish and Christian right) influences as well as the oil lobbies on American politics has cost them dearly for the past 10 years and will continue to cost them more in the years to come. They will soon end up supplying cheap oil in abundance to America for as long as an American general runs the country's affairs — of course under the watchful eyes of the Zionists in Washington.

"Good intentions"

There are other sovereign states on America's bombing list. In each case a "justification" with special "good intentions" is ready for public consumption in America as and when required. At the best these "good intentions" are hard to accept and at worst, they are simply red herrings, the greatest being that Iraq is producing weapons of mass destruction.

Once the "good intentions" have buried ostrich-like, the logic behind the justifications will be difficult to accept. On this very subject one American commentator pointed out that when the Mafia commits violence, no one suggests that America bomb Sicily. On the subject of good intentions: In the book, "The Mainspring of Human Progress," G. Henry Weaver warned against good intentions. Years before 9/11, he wrote: "Most of the major ills of the world have been caused by well-meaning people who ignored the principle of individual freedom, except as applied to themselves, and were obsessed with fanatical zeal to improve the lot of mankindin-the-mass through some pet formula of their own. The harm done by ordinary criminals, murderers, gangsters, and thieves is negligible in comparison with the agony inflicted upon human beings by the professional do-gooders, who attempt to set themselves up as rulers on earth and who would ruthlessly force their views on all others with the abiding assurance that the end justifies the means.'

"The price is worth it"

In 1996, after five years of sanctions against Iraq and persistent bombing, a CBS reporter asked the US Ambassador to the United Nations, Madeleine Albright, a simple question: 'We have heard that a half million children have died (as a consequence of US policy against Iraq). Is the price worth it?" Albright's response was, 'We think the price is worth it." (This interview won an Emmy award but was rarely shown in America.) Somehow the cat of "real intentions" got out of the tightly bound diplomatic bag of "good intentions".

Future of tourism in Yemen has challenges and hope

BY FAROUK AL-KAMALI TAIZ BUREAU

ourism in Yemen is definitely going through crises. The land of the Queen of Sheba, the origin of civilization is today termed as a haven for terrorists and a land of fanatic beliefs. And it has become a member on the black list to which big countries warn their people against going to Yemen.

Inside the country the tourism sector suffers badly, there are not facilities for investment, no enforcement of laws, no tourist services, no festivals and qualified tourist cadre.

In fact Yemen could be the only country which does not have professional tourism guides. Why so?

And what could be done to help the situation?

The first man in tourism, Mr. Abdulmalik Al-Iryani gave an interview to Yemen Times staff and brought hope through the information he provided about the Tourist Establishments Classification Project under establishment now underway.

Q: What is the importance of this classification project and what exactly does it mean?

A: Through this project we aim at classifying or dividing the touristrelated establishments into defined levels. This is a kind of standardization that we opted for recently instead of having more than one gauge or measurement in our definition of the various tourist establishments existing in the

Not only this, but the standardized classification would become a legal reference in all our affairs and in solving any disputes that could appear in this field. We have given the existing tourist establishments a deadline before which they have to adjust their being so as to meet the criteria of the most relevant classification to them.

Q: But small motels, and they are many, would suffer from such a system because they are far from standardization and it would be difficult to enforce the new system on them. What about

A: The project keeps in mind such establishments and the various levels they could be included at. There are rates from one star to five stars and each rate has certain criteria which the establishment has to comply with. However, for those small businesses, we will give a greater chance to reach the required standard, but this does not mean that we would compromise regarding quality.

This is because quality is an important factor in tourism and can not be ignored. It is important that both the governmental and the private sectors would together to improve the quality of services and to lead this project to

Q: Although the tourist-related establishments are going through a down phase in income, they are complaining from the high taxation rate and electricity and water bills. How do you overcome this problem?

A: Yes, the problem you mentioned exists, and as a solution, the government has agreed last year to postpone collection of taxes and fees and it agreed with the ministry of finance to allow these establishments to pay the charges in installments over a relatively long time period. I think this could be credited as a serious step in this direction in order to solve some of the problems in the tourism sector.

The private sector has a great role to play. It is in essence the main investor in tourism and provides most of the tourism services.

Q: Recently we heard many voices demanding to close down night clubs and discos in Aden, to the extent that the case has reached court. Does this conflict with encouragement of invest-

A: This is not an issue of conflicting or non-conflicting interests. It is a case of obeying the laws and regulations of the country. If there are any cases of the kind, then the judiciary system is our source of decree and we have to abide by its verdicts. However, we see tourism as a multi sided concept and thanks to good tourism in Yemen is of the cultural, environmental and historical kind, and most of the tourists now come to Yemen for these purposes.

Q: In your opinion, what does the tourist sector in Yemen need and how can the private sector provide for tourism in Yemen?

A: There are great potentials in the tourist sector in Yemen and it could contribute greatly to the national income. But unfortunately due to lack of implementation and resources the sector could not produce the outcomes

The private sector has a great role to play. For it is in essence the main investor in tourism and provides most of the tourism services generally. It also contributes greatly in the training and rehabilitation of cadre and workforce in this sector.

In Yemen particularly the private sector is quite active and we find many of the investors in hotel and accommodation establishments come from the private sector. In any case there has to be strong and effective cooperation between the government and the private sector to improve the situation of tourism in the country.

Q: What about the challenges tourism faces in terms of the current unstable situation as in threat of war and acts of terrorism?

A: Tourism in the whole world has been negatively affected by the current developments, and Yemen especially has been affected because of the particular nature of its land and people. We have discussed on more than one occasion about the bad consequences of terrorism on the country and on the tourism sector in particular. But this does not mean to sit hand-folded and curse our luck. We have to work continuously in order to overcome the negative aspects of the situation and invest in the plus points that we have. We have to prepare ourselves for the future and what may come, because we have great natural resources and fantastic potentials that we should not let the current situation destroy.

Q: Then what does the ministry intend to do in this respect and what is the plan for this year?

A: We have laid down a plan that works on many fronts, the legislative and organizational aspects, and proper organizational boards. Also to modify the tourism and environment laws so as to serve tourism and investment. At the same time to publicize for the country externally and internally though campaigns, festivals and fairs internationally. And to publish a number of tourism related publications about Yemen. We will also dedicate a number of locations for tourism and rehabilitate those places so that they reach the desired standards and allow for large investments in them.

First, you'll notice on page 15 of this issue of the Yemen Times, the story of Canadian doctors who recently came - for the 12th time - to help teach and bring resources to Yemeni medical professionals.

Among their work this time around has been to talk about the challenges faced by women in Yemen's medical world. Good job. Such open discussion is needed, as Yemen needs to continue to move into a society where women can enjoy the same professional benefits of men.

The Canadian group - from the University of Western Ontario in London, Canada and led by Dr.

Dr. Marty Robinson

Martin Robinson is also spearheading work to build cancer clinics in Sana'a, Aden, and Taiz. Building all three will be a long term project, but some Yemeni businessmen and politicians are already stepping forward to give resources. In Aden donated land and supplies will help keep costs with otherwise would run into the millions of dollars.

Over the years, the Canadian team has given untold thousands of dollars worth of equipment, such as hightech gamma cameras and microscopes, not to mention piles of medical books.

Further, it's worked with Yemen's Ministry of Health to get folic acid into flour used across the country. This prevents brain and spinal discases in infant children.

It's all commendable. I have lived in Canada and am close to many Canadians. I can attest to the fine humanitarian spirit of people from this country. These doctors feel it's their role to help Yemen improve its standards, just like, over the decades, standards in Canada have improved.

"Yemen is developing its medical care the same as Canada did," said team member Dr. Hugh Allen.

There's more. Under the guidance of another Canadian physician, Dr. Jean Chamberlain - Froese, many people in Yemen have also been helped lately through another project.

Chamberlain is from McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, but makes Yemen her home for much of the year. And she is largely responsible for tens of thousands of dollars of equipment that has just arrived from a charitable group in Hamilton known as the Sisters of St. Joseph.

The ship is unloaded. The trucks have run. The goods are distributed. Tens of thousands of dollars of health care equipment from the Sisters is in

There's wheelchairs and walkers, operating room lights, examination tables and the list goes on. It helps meet the massive needs in a country

Yemen has traditionally been near the bottom of aid recipients. It receives some $20 per capita in annual overseas aid. Often even that aid from international groups like the UN and World Bank doesn't get where it's needed.

This donation, however, has hit its target. One recipient is a new maternal care clinic here in Sana'a, where Dr. Chamberlain-Froese works. When fully operational, it will handle 4,000 deliveries annually.

The other is a group of care homes, where about 400 disabled people in several facilities across Yemen live.

"We haven't seen so many wheelchairs. And they're all made of good material. Thank you very much. God bless you," said the manager of one of them.

"What we're giving them are tools so they can help other people," notes Chamberlain-Froese, who worked with St. Joe's from this end to make the donation happen. Last spring, she invited Brian Guest, executive director of St. Joseph's Health System, to meet with Yemeni locals to see how the Sisters in Hamilton might help.

"What's important about this is that it's from private, not public money," said Guest, whose organization is a capital purchasing group for 130 hospitals in Canada. Surplus supplies from those hospitals and from manufacturers feeds the foreign aid program, known as International Outreach.

It now ships 50 tonnes of equipment annually. Haiti and Uganda have been key benefactors. In 1999 Port au Prince's university hospital received $250,000 worth of life-saving oxygen equipment, installed at the time by Canadian peacekeepers.

International Outreach also helps train medical professionals in developing countries, linking them with professionals in Hamilton hospitals. It's hoped that will be the next step in the new relationship with Yemen. As a capital, Sana'a in particular is hungry for improved medical training. That could entail methods such as teleconferencing.

In the meantime, Yemeni officials are at least now familiar with St. Joseph's and Hamilton. That's important, because while the aid shipment was heading across the Atlantic, port authorities initially warned Dr. Chamberlain-Froese they might turn the goods back to Canada due to a new law governing foreign donations.

That's when The Yemen Times got involved, helping to ensure there was no misunderstanding. Indeed, the shipment was vital. Now, the ship, proverbial and literal, has arrived.

While life will continue to have its challenges here in Yemen, it's good to know that it's now possible for folks from the other side of the world to help out. From this side, we'll watch the horizon for more.

From that moment, doubt began to nag at me. I said to myself, if the girl was prepared to forfeit her honor and go out with a strange boy before getting married, what's to stop her doing the same thing once she's married? This never actually happened, of course, but there was always that bit of doubt nagging me. It was only then that I fully appreciated the meaning of the Yemeni proverb, "What begins with passion ends in rejection".1 Anyway, that's what happened, Mus'ida, so make sure you tell our son the story of my cousin Naji before you go to bed tonight, and remind the girls in our family of the saying of the Yemeni philosopher, 'Beware of courtship before marriage!"2

Delegation brings resources, expertise Canadian doctors offer a helping hand for the 12th year

BY ABDUL M. ASSABRI YEMEN TIMES STAFF

medical delegation from universities in Canada has been on a threeweek voluntary mission to Yemen to help local

The delegation's mission ran from

Jan. 10 - 30. A dinner reception was held Jan. 29 at the Taj Sheba Hotel, hosted by Encana, a Canadian company operating in oil exploration.

The group taught and worked surgeries in Taiz, Jibla, Aden, Sayoon, al-Mukalla, and then to Sana'a.

Educational seminars and conferences between the Yemeni and Canadian doctors are also on the team's agenda.

During a final day of conferences, held the Taj Sheba on Jan. 30, participants discussed the theme "Aspiring Women in Medicine.

Minister of Public Health & Population, Dr. Abdunnaser al-Munaibari, was in attendance along with the Yemeni and Canadian doc-

Dr. Martin Robinson, lead the group of 12 doctors. His first visit to Yemen was in 1988 and this marked his twelfth visit.

Robinson, an obstetrician-gynecologist at the University of Western Ontario in London, Ontario, Canada, said the team felt it accomplished what it set out to.

The aim of these visits is to offer advanced technological experiences and practically train the Yemeni doctors in the operation theaters and, theoretically in the lecture halls.

"We spent three days in Sana'a, three days in Taiz, three days in Aden, two days al-Mukalla and two-and-ahalf days in Seyaoon," said.

During the last visit, a great emphasis was placed on teaching and conducting workshops and seminars in addition to seeing patients.

'We also spent three days in Socatra. We have visited a large part of the island together with the Minster of Health, and we were able to look at several health centers," he noted.

A new hospital is to be built in the main city of Socatra along with a large primary health center.

Since 1988, Robinson and his team have initiated several health projects. "We established the first medical

"We look at examples of women who have been effective in medicine and tried to make sure that we can encourage other women to do the same which may result in the creation of a society for women in medicine," Kennedy-Glans told the Yemen Times.

"We are looking at women in medicine. A lot of women are graduating in medicine. They sometimes have difficulty in getting jobs," she noted.

Kennedy-Glans is expecting a considerable improvement on the part of Yemeni female doctors.

"(In Canada) more than 50 percent of the medical schools are filled with women," she said. "Women do very well and they are very caring. I think they will offer huge contribution to health care in Yemen.'

The Jan. 30 workshop aimed to raise awareness of the woman's role in health education.

Minister of Health al-Munaibari, said he appreciated the role of the Canadian Medical Delegation in supporting health projects, giving lectures, and training the Yemeni medical

Dr. al-Munaibari placed stress on encouraging women in medicine and continued health education.

During their visit to Taiz, the Canadian delegation met Ahmed Hayel Saeed, Head of the Yemeni-Canadian Society for Medicine Education & Arts.

He supported the delegation's strategy to establish a national cancer for Yemen's population.

Based on their experience and recommendations of the World Health Organization, the first cancer center would be built in Sana'a, with regional centers in Taiz, Aden and al-Mukalla.

During their visit, the Canadian Medical Delegation focus on giving lectures about hospitals management, helping cardiac patients, dealing with neurotic diseases and mother and child

One key aim of the Canadian doctors' visit was to address the issue of the high infant and maternal mortality, one of the highest rates in the world.

They look at facilities and infrastructure in which they can develop a program to monitor the welfare of mothers and babies

They are particularly interested in establishing relations with Yemeni positions and universities which will help Yemenis to improve health education, training, and the health of mothers and babies.

The Canadian Medical delegation expressed their deep appreciation for visiting and enjoying Yemen.

Bringing maternal technology to Yemen

rofessor Amer Salemeen Balafeer, among Yemen's distinguished Yemeni doctors, works as an assistant professor at the medicine college in Hadhramout University in the field of obstetrics and sterility diseases

He has been appointed as a general manager for al-Mukallah Motherhood & Childhood Hospital since 1998 and is regarded as one of the best Arab and Yemeni doctors who treats sterility.

He was born in 1959 in al-Hagarain in Dowan valley and received his primary, preparatory and secondary education from al-Mukalla secondary school. He studied medicine in Aden University and graduated in 1985 with an excellent grade.

He received a sc medal from the Education Ministry in

He has a diploma in obstetrics from Baghdad University. He is also a holder of doctorate in reproductive physiology and fetus implantation, (test-tube babies) and has proved to be among the best in this field in Yemen.

He has also received certificates of appreciation Saddam High Institute for his researches in fetus and sterility treatment at Baghdad University.

The Yemen Times met him recently. Following is an edited version of the Q: Could you give us an account of your new invention in fetus implantation and test-tube baby?

A: The thesis that has been presented was about using reproductive hormones in the process of external fertility and fetus implantation. A special implanted embryo was used in the process of the external fertility and then the embryo was put back into the women's uterus. In the Middle East this has been applied for the first time in Iraq. The study that has been conducted on such operation has lasted three years and the ultimate goal of this implanted embryo has been successfully achieved.

Scientific research has proved that the implanted fetus rivals successfully those conceived naturally

In the traditional test-tube baby used in experiments. Another experiment was carried out on 131 husbands.

The medical substance that has been used in that implanted fetus contain hormones taken from women in any given day during her fertility period. Blood samples then taken from the woman and the liquid substances are separated from the blood hymatocyte and then put in sterilization machines.

The blood in this case contains a very high level of certain hormones which in turn helps the baby to grow outside the women's uterus or inside the test-tube.

On this basis, I was honored from the Saddam High Institute and got the institute's coat of arms for this tremendous accomplishment. That is because, I am the first Arab doctor to touch on this sensitive matter.

I also got the coat of arms from the college of medicine in Baghdad for this

Q: How do we make use of such medical experiment locally in order to be applied in the governorate to lessen sufferings of people whether in receiving treatment or going abroad?

A: The practical use of this project in the governorate in particular and in Yemen in general in need of huge potentialities and extraneous efforts. Firstly, what is needed is to inaugurate a test-tube babies center where medical apparatus and implantation devices are indispensable. We at the al-Mukallah Motherhood & Childhood Hospital are doing our best to implement the new hospital where its foundation has been laid by Dr. Abdulkder Bajammal after making efforts by the governor of Hadhramout, Dr. Salem Abdullah Qunaid al-Owbathani, the General Manager of the Public Health and Population in the governorate in order to include the new hospital within the state's budget.

We pin our hopes on that the new hospital will include a special fertility and test-tube baby unit. We are trying also to open a new center in the Hadhramout University where a large number of people have fallen prey to incurable sterility diseases.

Q: A foundation stone has been laid for a college of medicine in Hadhramout. Do you intend to estabresearch and studies?

A: Establishing the college of medicine in the governorate is necessary. Besides, establishing a medical center for studies and research is the basis of establishing the college of medicine. The al-Mukallah Motherhood & Childhood Hospital and Ibn Seena Hospital work side-by-side as educational medical centers.

The new al-Mukalla Hospital and other medical units in Ibn Seena Hospital are to be completed. What is needed is to establish a highly developed scientific center for the higher and scientific academic studies in the governorate.

This cannot be achieved unless there is no collaborative efforts exerted in order to make a success for such proj-

There will an easy access for medical service and research for people in the governorate, doctors, and students. This will constitute a mainstay to promote and improve the medical health services in the governorate.

In addition to this, Dr. Ali Hood Babbad, the Reactor of the Hadhramout University is fully conversant with the process of research and looks forward to promote the scientific research in the governorate.

Q: It has been recently observed that a number of cancer operations have been conducted in the al-Mukallah Motherhood & Childhood Hospital.

Have made diagnosis for such cases?

A: It is difficult to diagnose several simple cases. Research has to include a large number of cases. A clinical comprehensive study is to be conducted to know all there is to know about the reasons behind the spread of such cases.

Q: The al-Mukallah Motherhood & Childhood Hospital rivals hospitals of the private sector. What are the criterion that have been taken to reach such a

A: You know very well that the hospital was in a very deplorable conditions particularly in the 1970s. After the hospital got its independence, parts of the hospital units were renewed and it has been fully equipped with sophisticated medical apparatus whether as Omar and Abdulkader al-Amodi.

The hospital's renewal and updating has lead to dramatic improvements in all its health units, such as,renewing the general and family wards and providing medical apparatus which couldn't not be detected in some of the private hospitals.

Preparations are underway to establish a ward for the premature babies financed by Shiekh Abdullah Baqshan. This includes supplying the hospital with the surgical anesthetics and other units in the hospital.

Several wards have been renewed. Medical supplies have become accessible for the nurse, doctor, and the midwives.

Q: Can you give us a brief account of the new hospital?

A: The al-Mukalla Hospital is one of the typical specialized hospitals in the field of obstetrics and childhood. The hospital contains six floors and is fully equipped with state-of-the-art medical apparatus along with fire alarms and the latest technologies in telecommunications and telephone exchanges for doctors in the state of emergency.

The hospital offers distinguished services in emergency rooms, children clinics, and inpatient wards.

The capacity has reached more than 150 beds. For the first time in the governorate, the hospital will include children's surgery along with performing operations simultaneously where patients are given the full treatment.

The hospital comprises excellent multi-labs services fully equipped with medical technicalities and external clinics together with offering TV rays services. Besides, a scientific library has been established comprising valuable resources in medicine and large halls for holding meetings and delivering scientific lectures.

The hospital has been featured by the availability of special units for separation, sterilization, maintenance, and washing. Its entrances and exists have been uniquely designed in order to facilitate offering services for the patients. It also comprise a garden, car park, and has three large entrances, areception hall, and dining room for health workers. A modern kitchen has been established fully equipped with the kitchen utensils and modern stoves.

The hospital alsohas a round-theclock central pharmacy.

The hospital's overall costs have reached YR 430 million.

Promoting the hospital has been given priority and we as doctors have to improve it for the better along with pursuing the rights of the health workers as that of their workmates in other

Shara'ab Editor in chief says mass organizations are one of essential pillars of any democratic process. Mass organization contributions to the national action in recent past were reasons behind achieving several political successes scored by our people and wringing out national independence &sovereignty. Interconnection of these organizations to national political action made them to a large extent adhered to the political forces orientations. Thus they have changed into facades of political parties, whereas professional demand have been pushed away. The step taken by the General union of Yemeni Youth is a pioneering one as it has come as a product of coordination and dialogue of the political forces. This makes it an example of a pioneering popular action for other mass organizations. The national interest necessitates reevaluation of these organizations and setting up mechanisms to unity what is existing according to new goals. The aim is to render these mass organizations as support for the political forces in consolidation of democracy and unity and cohesion of internal front, in addition to realizing future development and political objectives.

The newspaper editorial mentions that amidst the current circumstances and the big crises the region is experiencing with the increasing American military build-up, to lead the world into a whirlwind of security and economic crises, our political institutions have to consider and specify our position in relation of what is going on in the region and its reflections on the internal situation.

All these events in the region come to coincide with our country's preparations for electoral battle. If we enter the election campaign extemporaneously and without rationalizing publicity campaigns, would certainly increase the negative impact on results of what the region is passing through. Our country would be the most to be harmed by this crisis. All political forces should join efforts to surmount the crisis with least losses.

Yemen did not receive a list of those wanted by America

Columnist Yahya Tahir al- Hakim says in an article the coming parliamentary elections are the third in unified Yemen. They have to be characterized by new and distinguished traits regarding broad participation of voters and proper choice of representatives able to offer what is useful to citizens to deliver them from deteriorated economic situation and to reform political economic and social conditions. Their elections must be different in terms of nomination and electoral campaigning processes in line with letter and spirit of elections and referendum law there must be no allowance of and breach of the law. With this test credibility and fairness of the upcoming elections would be ascertained. Or otherwise they would prove their weakness by partiality and silence towards any excesses concerning the law. The whole matter is to be measured with a yardstick of actual exercise on the ground rather than flowery words of statements to mass media.

April 2003 elections must differentiated by honesty, transparency and freedom of mans participation in selection and then recognition of their results. The coming round of elections has to produce a parliament armed with power and competence to take difficult decisions by practicing its constitutional authorities. The new parliament has to put the country's interests and peoples woes above any other consideration. It must be capable of rejecting all attempts for chaining it by those of narrow interests, who do not perceive possibility of coexistence with sovereignty of law and order. Such elements intend to malfunction the constitutional institutions to serve aims of their interests alone. Their interests would thrive only under chaos and absence of laws and regulations because they are in essence illegitimate interests.

Columnist Hizam al-Mahbashi says it is regrettable that in the state of Yemen, supposed to be following the course of construction and democracy, the various situations and those of its people are running from bad to worse. A number of its economic sectors are completely at half and rate of unemployment is in progressing rise. There is no longer what is called government plan concerning job opportunities. The low level of income is still the main cause of continual shakings resulting from inflation and rise of prices. Services are in continued deterioration despite their high prices because of government reform program. These services included power, water, telephone, education, health and others. This situation means that all-Yemeni people, forces and personalities are called for a serious work to speedily tackle them. The priority should be the practical communication with the masses, making them aware of aspects of failure to make an effective public opinion and mass orientation to use the upcoming parliamentary election a threshold to radical reform of all the country's situations. Backward situation should be uprooted and replaced by sound ones. The beginning should be in building foundations of a state of law and institution based on strategic and practical foundations to address all causes of defect and failure.

Billionaire to buy troubled Senators

TORONTO (Reuters) - Toronto billionaire Eugene Melnyk confirmed his interest in purchasing the financially-troubled Ottawa Senators Friday, saying his goal was to keep professional hockey in the nation's capital.

A passionate hockey fan and one of the world's richest men with a net worth estimated, by Forbes Magazine, at $1.8 billion, Melnyk says he has jumped into the bid process to ensure another Canadian hockey franchise does not move to the

"I've been a hockey fan since I was a kid," said Melnyk, chairman and founder of Toronto based pharmaceutical firm Biovail Corp. "In this case my interest is, I don't want to see a Canadian team going south of the border.

"It isn't going to happen. My motivation is different than a lot of others, when I bought St Michaels it wasn't because I needed an OHL team.

"The team was in trouble, the team had a fantastic history, and I just wanted to make sure it survived." The NHL would not confirm that it was in possession of any proposal from Melnyk. Sources close to Melnyk, however, confirmed that he met NHL commissioner Gary Bettman in New York two weeks ago and has been in regular contact with league officials. Yes, I can confirm that Mr Melnyk has expressed an interest in purchasing the Ottawa Senators and keeping the team

The NHL had granted Bryden exclusivity until last Friday, at which point the PricewaterhouseCoopers was to open the process to other bids if a deal had not been reached.

A final decision by the bankruptcy court on Bryden's plan is now expected Monday.

Sources close to Melnyk said his bid would match or top Bryden's offer of $130 million and would come with no strings attached.

Reports out of Ottawa have indicated Bryden is attempting to patch together a complex tax-shelter deal similar to the one that collapsed and resulted in the franchise filing for bankruptcy.

While the Senators top the NHL standings, the franchise has struggled with flagging box office sales and burgeoning NHL salaries — paid in the costlier U.S.

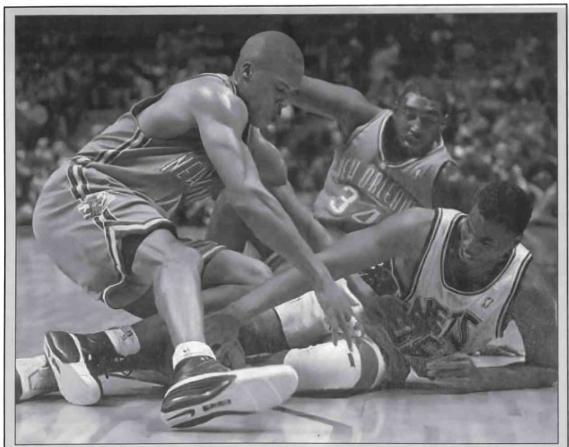

The team has also faced higher taxes and received little of the help that U.S. clubs often receive from government. There is little doubt that Melnyk possesses the financial clout to take on the troubled franchise. According to Forbes, the 42-year-old ranks among the top 250 richest men in the world. He is also described as competitive and a keen sportsman. A graduate of St Michael's College in Toronto, Melnyk came to the rescue of the Ontario Hockey League's struggling St Mike's Majors and is developing plans to build a new arena for the team. Melnyk is also well known in thoroughbred horse racing circles, having entered horses in some of North America's most prestigious events, including the Kentucky Derby.

'Give peace a chance'

The head of Yemen's Islamist opposition Islah Party Sheikh Abdullah al-Ahmar slammed what he called the "blood suckers" in the U.S. administration who are pushing for war.

"Those who are amassing fleets, speak with arrogance and their aim is to destroy Irag's ... achievements and to control its oil which is making the blood suckers in the U.S. administration drool," Ahmar said.

Ahmar described the possible war as 'immoral' and said that "the Zionist, American and British war is because of oil, it is oil that makes those vampires sali-

They demanded that the Arab leaders open the doors of jihad. "Open the doors of jihad, rulers," they chanted.

While demonstrators carried banners that contained phrases refusing war and appealing for peace, there were no pictures of Saddam Hussein.

People also demonstrated outside United Nations offices in Syria and Bahrain hours before a deadline for a report by U.N. arms inspectors on Iraq's cooperation in their hunt for weapons of mass destruction.

Also in India's financial capital, Bombay, about 1,000 protesters against war on Iraq shouted anti-American slogans as they marched through the crowded streets, blocking traffic.

Demonstrators in Damascus gathered outside the U.N. office where they chanted slogans, calling Bush a "criminal and a butcher" and demanding he ditch his "plan" to attack Iraq.

"We sacrifice our souls and blood for Iraq," chanted young demonstrators. "America wants to dominate us, it wants to weaken us and to destroy Iraq to control its oil," said student Housam Halabi, echoing a view shared by many Syrians and Arabs.

The arms inspectors' report to the Security Council is seen as crucial for any U.S. attack on Iraq. Baghdad says it hopes the report will confirm it is free of banned weapons and find its cooperation with the inspections was "super."

In the Bahraini capital, Manama, about 100 youths asked the U.N. to prevent the United States from launching a war on Iraq.

Carrying banners saying "No' to war in Iraq" and "Death to America," they delivered a letter asking the United Nations to fight poverty and illiteracy rather than provide authorization for a war on Iraq.

"We are asking for peace and we want the United Nations to hear our pleas to save the Iraqi people," said 20-year old civil engineering student Ebtisam Al Shenoo, standing underneath blood red banners and fluttering Iraqi flags.

"We want to reach them (the United Nations) before they make any decision," marketing student Nidhal al-Qassab told Reuters, adding that he hoped the United Nations will prevent a war.

World leaders divided

Meanwhile, world leaders counseled restraint while others called for condemnation as U.N. weapons inspectors reported to the Security Council on efforts to disarm Iraq of its weapons of mass destruction.

The United States, Britain and Australia condemned Saddam for failing to cooperate with the inspection process and indicated that time for action was drawing close.

"We made it very clear ... that we could not allow the process of inspection to string us on forever," said U.S. Secretary of State On Friday Japanese Foreign Minister Yoriko Kawaguchi condemned Iraq for failing for more than a decade to carry out its obligations under United Nations resolu-"Iraq needs to fulfill U.N. resolutions and completely wipe out the concerns among the international community," Kawaguchi told the Diet. "(Iraq) is challenging the authority of the U.N.'

But other Security Council members, most importantly Russia, China and France, said the inspections should continue for several weeks, if not months. That difference of opinion could make or break international support for military interven-

Outside U.N. headquarters in New York, more than 300 protesters demonstrated against a possible war in Iraq, chanting people united stop the war.

In Germany, about 3,000 people protested outside the U.S. consulate in Frankfurt, carrying banners with slogans including "No Bush-fire" and accusing the United States of going to war over oil. Hundreds more gathered in downtown Dresden and in Berlin.

In his report to the Security Council Monday, Blix, who heads the hunt for biological and chemical weapons programs, said Iraq had not genuinely accepted the U.N. resolution demanding that it disarm.

His nuclear inspection counterpart ElBaradei said there was no evidence so far that Iraq was reviving its nuclear program and said inspectors needed a "few months" to complete the search.

British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw said Saddam was "making a charade of inspection" and was "practicing conceal-

Australian Prime Minister John Howard said Iraq was in "material breach." Australia is one of only three nations _ along with the United States and Britain _ to have sent troops to the Persian Gulf region to prepare for possible war with Iraq.

Elsewhere, however, there was little appetite for military action.

Jordanian Information

Mohammad Affash Adwan said the inspectors should be allowed to finish their mission in Iraq.

Turkish Prime Minister Abdullah Gul said the responsibility to avoid war lay with Iraq, but called for a new Security Council resolution before military action was taken.

"It's very important for us," said Gul, whose predominantly Muslim nation is a close U.S. ally.

Norway and Canada's leaders both echoed calls for more time, while New Zealand, called on Baghdad to cooperate more fully with U.N. inspectors.

The European Union is split down the middle on the issue, with Spain, Italy, Portugal and others leaning toward the pro-American camp led by Britain, while Belgium, Sweden and Finland are more closely aligned with France and Germany's anti-war stance.

French President Jacques Chirac and German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder agreed Monday that the inspectors should be given the time they need to complete their mission, thepresident's office said.

Earlier Monday, Russian President Vladimir Putin emphasized the need to continue weapons inspections during a telephone conversation with British Prime Minister Tony Blair.

Foreign Affairs Minister: Iraq and other issues

Arab region if the attack on Iraq does

A: There are many scenarios with all its possibilities, however these are only predictions. A situation like what we are living in today could easily change from one moment to another. It's like you are walking through a minefield - you don't know what and when something would explode. But in all cases I have to emphasize that attack on Iraq would defiantly destabilize the area. Any foreign invasion on the Iraqi land or regime or people will only make things

Q: Yemen has faced several terrorist incidents that caused the country great losses. While the government had declared its commitment in combating terrorism, how do you explain the synchronization on the regional and international level?

A: Yemen's stance against terrorism is quite clear. We condemn all terrorist acts and confirm our total cooperation in combating it, in and outside the country. We well understand that stability is in our favor and violence and the like is defiantly going to harm the country.

Throughout history violence had lead to more violence and fighting between the nations leads only to destruction and loss. Yemen is committed to the international agreements it signed.

As for the synchronization, Yemen is working on two fronts. The first is concerned with exchange of information between the different security offices in a number of countries. And the other is concerned with the local security situation, through training and establishing of qualified terrorist combating forces, as well as extra protection in the borders especially the coastal areas, to ent misuse of the Yemen land

Q: Cooperation between Yemen and

Q: Would there be a rearranging of the USA, did it go through a low phase after the CIA drone missile attack in November on six al-Qaeda suspects. What about the consequences of the murder of the American aid workers in

> A: Cooperation between the two countries is ongoing and is moving forward in a normal way under the international agreements and laws. It is true that the Jibla incident reflected the ugly face of terrorism. These aid workers had lived in peace in the country for more than 30 years, and their murder only made it clear how important it is to fight terrorism in the country. The government is more determined in eliminating these negative elements of society. The country has faced a lot so far from them and will not stay silent.

> Q: There is a number of Yemenis who are still in custody at the Cuba base, after the September 11th attack. What has come over those?

> A: Still the same, and we like other concerned countries are continuously demanding their submission to Yemen to take them to court according to Yemeni laws. Yemen has proved that it is one of the countries most concerned for its people and their safety and their release from the countries in which they are arrested in. But it has to be known that they are a part of many from various countries who were arrested for the same reasons.

> Q: The Trio-summit between Yemeni, Ethiopia, and Sudan held recently in has showed cooperation between the three countries. Why did Eritrea receive this summit with annoy-

> A: Yes, the meeting has reflected the good relations between the three countries nd their political economical and security cooperation in order to establish stability in Eritrea's reaction had no bases at all, because the summit is a natural consequence of the developing relations between the three countries.

Leaders of the summit and especially president Ali Abdulla Saleh had announced that this summit has nothing against Eritrea and the country in fact carries good feelings

Also the disagreement between the three countries and that country should be solved with negotiation and dialogue. In this respect we are trying to bring the viewpoints together and also trying to establish peace in Somalia as well, so that the whole region is in stable conditions.

Yemen is a part of this region and is concerned that all countries in it are in stable conditions and fine, for it continuously suffers from anything that happens in them, for example the endless flood of refugees from

Q: Being minister of foreign affairs, you are responsible for the safety and conditions of the Yemenis abroad who have been arrested, such as Sheiek Al-Moued in Germany and before him the Yemeni businessman, Abdulsalam Al-Heela. What have you done in their

A: We are still on their case and our efforts are continuously being spent in order to release them. And we are doing this under the umbrella of international laws and the UN agreements.

Q: President Ali Abdulla Saleh paid a visit to Russia and in which he made contracts to buy weapons. Is it an introduction to new economic cooperation between the two countries?

A: Yes, Yemen strives to create good economic cooperation with Russia and all Economic relations are a part of all relations in general and it is in the country's interest to maintain good overall relations with its friendly countries. However the visit was not only for the weapons. It also took the regional and international issues in discussion, and Russia is an influential country and one of the great five, so it is important to create good bonds with it.

Q: Yemen's government is being criticized for buying expensive military hardware, whereas at the same time it is requesting donations and aid from other countries in order to face the economic situation. How do you explain that? A: These are exaggerations and they don't have an accurate base. The country needs to defend itself and the weapons are used for defense. And if you want to compare, then you might as well compare how much the country spends on its defense against what other countries are spending. Yemen has all rights to ensure the safety of its people and sovereignty over its land.

Q: The Israeli interfering in the Red Sea area's policies was that one of the topic discussed in the summit. Explain.

A: Of course the main topics which were discussed took up all the concerns of the three countries. Naturally the Israeli interfering in the region was one of those topics.

Israel always tries to make use of any conflicts in the area, and we all have to be aware and careful of this aspect. So all the Arab countries should join in efforts to stand against this interfering. Israel wants to control the Red Sea, but if that happens the stability of the whole region will be at stake.

Q: Relation with the GCC has seen a recent development especially after the joining of Yemen to some of the council's establishments. Recently also an agreement has been signed. So what next? Must Yemen fulfill some conditions before it is given the green light?

A: Geographically, culturally and strategically Yemen is a part of the GCC, so naturally it is heading to be a part of it politically. And Yemen is qualified to join as an economic market and rich force for manpower, as well as a military force that can serve in providing defense.

However on the down side we need to be qualified economically. And this is what Yemen is doing now with assistance of the

The agreement states that the gulf has come over all the political differences and that they will help in improving Yemen's economical situation. But this partnership needs a lot of working and struggling to make it successful, from both governmental and nongovernmental sectors. Yemen's joining in some of the establishment is a first mile of the road, and we still have to walk it

Aden Hotel celebrates 2003

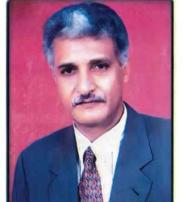

Aden Hotel held its annual ceremony staff party on Jan. 5 to honor its employees. A number of politicians and businessmen joined the hotel's employees during the ceremony Fadel AL-Hilali, General Manager of the hotel, said "Today we celebrate all those who belong to this tourist establishment in the beautiful city of Aden. Aden Hotel has achieved a good reputation and international status along with great success that is because of you and your sincere efforts."

He pointed to the success and serious efforts that Sheik Mohammed Abdlqawi AL -Muflahi exerted. "In spite of being busy he preferred to share you this day, and thank everyone who participated, and he is still bringing the tourism movement in Aden, the beautiful city, in to view."

He also pointed that all hotel employees have been offered full care and attention. He delivered his greetings and regards to all the companies that sponsored this ceremony hoping that 2003 will encourage the employees to exert more efforts and work harder.

Fadel Saaid, Deputy Manager, added, "Today we celebrate as our hotel achieves tangible improvements through its special tourist services. Our visitors have witnessed and have a good impression that reflects the tourist experience and high qualification that our staff have. We are very proud of the fulfilled success in promoting tourism in Aden. This hotel is one of the signposts of Aden and in Yemen in general." He concluded that 2003 will be more active and energetic.

In a statement to the Yemen Times, Sheik Mohammed Abdulqawi AL-Muflahi, owners representative said,, "It is my pleasure to share with my brothers and sons their happiness in their annual ceremony in which they are honored. Experienced and qualified employees are traits of the Aden Hotel, which is considered a tourist stand for Aden. In spite of the difficult conditions that Yemen has gone through, and the small number of tourists, we are here to promote and activate the tourism industry. We all have to pay more attention to this field that will certainly supply us with revenues. He pointed out that Yemen's tourism is greatly supported by President Ali Abduallah Saleh, who enjoys spending his vacation in Aden.

Mr. Mohammed AL-Muflahi Mr. Fadel AL-Hilali

Mr. Fadel Saaid

Aden Hotel is considered one of the famous hotels in Yemen and has a prime tourist location amidst the center of Aden City. Moreover its architecture and designs attract any visitor to Aden as well as its manifold Arabic and foreign delicious food that have everyone's admiration. It has spacious single and double rooms, and suits to host well-known personalities. The hotel contains conference halls with the latest technical equipment to host conferences and workshops. I. What to Say Situations and expressions (40) Expressing obligations (i)

he word 'obligation' refers to a condition that indicates what action ought to be taken according to the dictates of law or custom, as a matter of duty, or being driven by a sense of propriety. It may either indicate a promise, or something that is necessary to be done under the force of circumstances.

'Obligation' may also mean expression of gratitude. But in this lesson, we are going to look at different ways of expressing obligation in the sense of compulsion.

- You must obey your higher authorities. (The speaker decides on the basis of a stated rule or law. As such, obligation is imposed by the speaker.)
- All shops and business establishment must be closed latest by 11 p.m. (Obligation is expressed by public signs.)
- All students have to take the midsem test by the scheduled date as announced by the Dean. No one will be exempted. (Obligation is imposed by external circumstances. It's a habitual obligation that the speaker knows about.)
- All employees of the General Administration Department are required to attend the Annual General Meeting and elect the office bearers for the current year. (Expression of official obligation.)
- You are obliged to work overtime and finish the work assigned to you. (According to rules, law,
- It is mandatory to pay off the loan within the stipulated date. (Conveying a command, or compulsion.)
- One cannot seek relaxation to the statutory age limit. (Fixed or controlled by a statute.)
- Attendance at minimum 80% of lectures is obligatory. (Necessary as required by law.)

Answers to last week's question:

FORTUNE FAVOURS THE BRAVE

If we look at the lives of great men and analyze the factors that led to their greatness and glory, we will notice that almost all of them were courageous. They were capable of and ready for taking risks which lay at the bottom of their success. If they had been afraid of disaster that might befall them, they would not have risen to such heights in their lives. All great men have been, in some sense, gamblers of fortune. They have been rewarded by Dame Fortune for their courage, determination, energy and enthusiasm. In contrast, those who were cowards, hesitant, diffident and thought more of failure than success to their enterprise, were finally defeated. Therefore, we should be bold, brave with a positive attitude. Then, we would be crowned with success.

Currents of English Literature

The Imagist movement

Head, Department of English, University of Science & Technology, efore discussing Imagism or the Imagist movement it is necessary to explain words like 'image' and 'imagery'. An image is a picture brought into the mind by words; imagery is the use of such words. According to C. Day Lewis, an important modern poet, an image "is a picture made out of words." He adds, "A poem may itself be an image composed of a multiplicity of images." Imagery is used to signify figurative language, especially the vehicle of similes and metaphors.

Imagism was a movement of British and American poets in revolt from Romanticism. It flourished between the years1910 and 1917. T.E. Hulme's reaction against Romanticism and his advocacy of the 'hard, dry image' influenced Imagism. Ezra Pound was the leading figure of the movement. He believed that good poetry was based on images (pictures of solid, real things rather than ideas). He edited the first anthology of the movement, ,Des Imagistes (1914), which had eleven contributors: Richard Aldington, H.D. (Hilda Doolittle), F.S. Flint, Skipwith Cannell, Amy Lowell, William Carlos Williams, James Joyce, Ezra Pound, F.M. Hueffer (who later changed his name to Ford Madox Ford), Allen Upward, and John Cournos. Some of D.H. Lawrence's poems of this period can also be described as Imagist.

Amy Lowell was a woman of great energy. She created an unusual image for herself by always appearing in public with a cigar in her mouth. She quickly took the leadership of the Imagist movement away from Pound. After that, Pound called the Imagists

"the Amy-gists". Amy Lowell was responsible for several Imagist anthologies. The Imagist poets used clear and precise images and tried to eliminate every word "that did not contribute to the presentation." They used a rhythm freed from the artificial demands of metrical regularity. They preferred vers libre or free verse. The characteristic product of the movement tend to be short, composed of short lines of musical cadence, to avoid abstraction, and to treat the images with a hard, clear precision rather than with overt symbolic intent. Pound was of the opinion that "the natural object is always the adequate symbol." The influence of Japanese forms tanka and haiku is obvious in many Imagist poems. The following poem by Pound is an oft-quoted example of the terseness and imagery that the movement advocated:

In a station of the metro

The apparition of the faces in the crowd.

Petals on a wet, black bough.

It is rather like a Japanese haiku. On the surface, the poem has two separate images: the crowd and the branch. Actually, Pound is placing one image on top of the other, so that we see them as a single image. Therefore, the faces in the crowd become beautiful, like flower petals on a rainy day. The petals, meanwhile, become faces in a crowd. The new combined image is the real "apparition" - it floats before our eyes like a ghost which lives in no particular time or place.

Imagism could not endure long as a concerted movement, but it did usher English poetry into modernism. The Imagist movement influenced every major poet of the twentieth century, including stalwarts like W.B. Yeats, T.S. Eliot and Wallace Stevens.

Colombia explodes!

Shuttle breaks up, seven aboard

By BRAD LISTON

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Feb 1 (Reuters) - The space shuttle Columbia broke up in the skies over Texas on Saturday with seven astronauts on board after it lost contact with NASA minutes before its scheduled landing.

NASA warned local residents not to approach debris on the ground in the Dallas-Fort Worth area because of the shuttle's poisonous propellant.

Eyewitnesses reported debris scattered across northern Texas with residents coming across pieces in fields and on roads, including what appeared to be a door from the orbiter.

Dramatic television images of the shuttle's descent showed several white trails streaking through the blue sky, which showed the breakup of the shuttle because normally only a single trail is visible, experts said.

"Debris has been sighted in north central Texas. Search and rescue has been dispatched in Dallas-Fort Worth area," NASA said in a statement on its Web site. There were reports of a vast 120 square miles (310 sq km) debris

Rescue teams were searching for signs of the crew, which included the first Israeli to fly on the shuttle, former combat pilot Col. Ilan Ramon. Israelis watched their televisions in shock as details of the disaster unfolded.

A huge security operation was mounted to protect the take-off of the shuttle on Jan. 16 because of terrorism fears and the presence of the Israeli astronaut.

"There's no reason to believe there are any links to terrorism at this point, but we are fully investigating the situation," a White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said.

VIPs were away from a grandstand near the shuttle's landing strip by NASA officials after reports of the disaster. In Washington, the White House flag was at half staff.

The rest of the crew were Americans Mission Commander Rick Husband, Pilot William McCool, Payload Commander Michael Anderson, Mission Specialist David Brown, Mission Specialists Laurel Clark and Kalpana Chawla. Ramon was listed as a payroll specialist.

Danger of re-entry

Take-off and re-entry into Earth's U.S. human space flight, there had never been an accident in the descent to Earth or landing. Challenger exploded just after take-off.

The American flag flies at half staff at the press site with launch pad 39A in the background at the Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Florida Feb. 1. The shuttle lifted off from the pad with a crew of seven on a 16-day scientific research mission, and is feared crashed in northeastern Texas.

It was almost 17 years to the day that the Challenger shuttle exploded on Jan. 28, 1986, killing all seven astronauts on board. The seven astronauts on board Columbia had observed a minute's silence in their memory on Tuesday.

It was 32 months after the Challenger disaster before NASA flew a space shuttle again.

Angela Arllotto, a tourist to Cape Canaveral from Williamsburg, Pennsylvania, said: "I was so excited to see the shuttle come down. It doesn't seem possible."

The agency lost contact with the shuttle, which was completing a 16day mission, at around 9 a.m./1400 GMT while it was 207,000 feet atmosphere are the most dangerous (63,000 metres) above Earth, and 16 parts of a space mission. In 42 years of minutes from its scheduled landing at Kennedy Space Center. It was traveling at 12,500 mph (20,000 kph).

Columbia was NASA's oldest shuttle and first flew in 1981.

NASA would say only that it had declared a "contingency" which experts said meant they were securing as much information as possible for an investigation. A news conference by NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe at Kennedy Space Center in Florida which was scheduled to start at 1 P.M. (1800 GMT) was delayed.

On Friday, NASA's flight entry director, Leroy Cain, was asked about possible damage to the left wing of the orbiter which might have occurred on lift-off. He said analyses by NASA engineers had shown any damage to be minor, adding: "We're not working any concerns on the orbiter.'

Israel mourns, Bush to call Sharon

U.S. President George W. Bush rushed back to the White House from his Camp David presidential retreat. Aides said he would call Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon.

Ramon family friend Modi Keren told Israeli Army Radio he was with Ramon relatives: "We are all sitting and hoping to hear new things. This looks very bad. I very much hope we will hear different, because at this time things look awful."

Ramon's mother was a Holocaust survivor from the Auschwitz concentration camp. In memory of family members who did not survive the Nazi rule of World War Two, Ramon took with him a pencil drawing by a Czech Jewish boy.

There was mounting concern about toxic chemicals from the debris around Texas. NASA mission control in Houston said, "Any debris that is located in the Dallas-Fort Worth vicinity should be avoided and may be haz-

Nacogdoches, Texas, received one report of the finding of what appeared to be a door from the orbiter.

"We do have a debris field. It is scattered throughout Nacogdoches," said Victoria Lafollett, city manager of Nacogdoches about 145 miles (230 km) northeast of

"What we've done is activated our emergency operations center. Because we have so many pieces throughout the city, we're asking people to stay away from them. We're working closely with NASA and the FBI," Lafollett said.

Unusually big boom

There were many reports from local residents of the shuttle apparently breaking apart, with several trails seen as it headed toward Earth, and of an unusually big boom.

The U.S. space agency NASA said it lost contact with the space shuttle Columbia minutes before a scheduled landing Feb. 1, as it crossed the United States with seven astronauts on board. The shuttle's landing was overdue after it was planned to arrive at the Kennedy Space Center at 9:16 a.m. EST (14:16 GMT). NASA officials lost contact with the orbiter at about 9 a.m. (1400 GMT). The space shuttle Columbia, with a crew of seven, including Ilan Ramon, the first Israeli to travel on the space shuttle, lifts off from the Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Florida, in this January 16, 2003 file photo.

NASA headquarters said there had been no reported difficulties from the shuttle before it lost contact.

The shuttle's seven astronauts had closed out science experiments conducted on the mission, which had been deemed a success by scientists and NASA officials. The shuttle did not visit the International Space Station on Station, a $95 billion project nearing the final stages of completion, could hang in the balance after these events.

The three astronauts now living there have food, air and water to last for months but the station's orbit above the planet needs to be boosted by a visiting shuttle periodically.

The next space shuttle mission was

The fate of the International Space to have left on March 1 to carry a new segment to the space station, with astronaut Eileen Collins in command of the shuttle Atlantis.

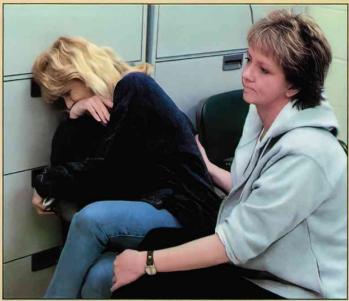

A Boeing company official said space station work at Kennedy was halted soon after news of the tragedy. Boeing works on space station components at Kennedy Space Center before they are launched.

Need services along Red and Arabian seas

Islands have tourism potential

By Ismail Al- Ghabri Yemen Times Staff

arine tourism in Yemen is still in its primary stages, but its future is bound to be prosperous and well-developed after completion of centers and projects by the shore, especially the infrastructure.

Yemen's seawater is plenty and abundant due to the fact that Yemen sits on two of the most important seas; the Red Sea and the Arabian sea.

There are many Yemeni islands, inhabited by man and animals. Some of these islands are volcanic and others are not.

An island in the Red Sea, Al-Tair Island (The island of the Bird) is one that is frequented by fishers who are skilled and travelers alike.

Old sailors may know of the importance of this Island more than we would.

All that we know through our sea travels or from reading is that island of Al-Tair was of impor-

Coral reefs off the coast of Yemen.

Second, the Island is suitable for monitoring the sea, which monitors the directions that ships are heading for while they cross the area by day or night

Al-Tair Island is 47 nautical miles from the eastern shore of the Red Sea and 82 km or 40 nautical miles from the island of Kamaran.

The island has watchtowers for observation, since the biggest warships, cargo ships, oil tankers all pass by it.

It is know that Britain used to administrate the island, but now this right has returned to Yemen.

For further knowledge the ship guides us to the depths to see what is in the deep. We will see marine life of different creations coming and going with all the colors, shapes and size.

This is just a quick view of marine tourism and its significance.

What is needed now is to set the coastline with appropriate services to promote tourism.

We will find it difficult to cover all the sea, even if we continue scouring the Red and Arabian Sea for months. There are areas still unknown by common folks or experts of the sea.
